 $\therefore$ THROUGH MUtUQTHE AS TURIAS.

OVIEDO, the capital of the Afturias, ftands near the conflux of two little rivers, which pour their water into the Bay of Bifcay, at Villaviciofa. It was built by Froila, or Fruela, the fon of Alfonfo I. furnamed El Catolico, and made the feat of his dominion. This city contains one thoufand five hundred and fixty families, and has five thoufand eight hundred and ninetyfive communicants, befides children under ten years of age, who are computed to be about one thoufand fix hundred; fo that the whole population being feven thoufand four hundred and ninety-five, they are not five to a family, It has four parifh churches, eight chapels, fix convents, and a fufficient number of priefts, with a bilhop, his auxiliary, and thirty-fix canons. The bifhopric is worth fixty thoufand ducats, and the chapter is reckoned eighty thoufand, the former being equal to $f .6,59 \mathrm{I}$.

Vol. II. B bihopric

 per annum.

The family where I took up my abode, was that of the auxiliary bilkop. He is more than fix feet two inches high, very ftout, remarkably well made, handfome, youthful in his appearance, cheerful, astive, and confiderably more than threefcore years of age. His manner is eafy, and his converfation lively. The title given to him is, Moft Illuftrious; and upon the firft approach to him; you bend the knee, and kifs his ring, having previoufly received his benedittion, fignified by crofting with his right hand.

His palace is far from elegant, yet by na means uncomfortable. You enter by the coach-houfe, and from thence pafs through a door into the ftable, or up the ftair-cafe to the dwelling, which is over thefe. When afcended, you go through a kind of gallery, or lobby, to the bihop's apartments, confifting of a drawing-room of about thirty by eighteen, a little fudy, and a correfponding 解onding bed-room. The dining-room is about twenty-four by twenty-two, and not far from it is the little kitchen, with a few bed-rooms in the intermediate fpace. The whole has white wails, and ill-jointed floors. The chairs and the long table are of oak.

$[3]$

If the palace itfelf is plain; the file of living is ftill more remarkable for its fim= plicity: enough for comfort, although little for luxury, and lefs for oftentation. Our dinner commonly confifted of a fopa, or bread fewed in broth, followed by an olla, compofed of beef and mutton, a bit of bacon, and fome faufages, with garvanzos, or large Spanifh peas (cicer arietinum). At other tables they add veal and fowls. This was fucceeded by lome kind of roaf meat, or game; and fih, in fome thape or other, brought up the rear. Every morning and evening, inftead of tea, chocolate, with Na ples bifcuits, was handed round.

The good bifhop filled up his mornings. with the duties and functions of his office; after dinner he too's his fiefta; then either rode or walked; and in the evenings converfed with his friends, who affembled round him, His family confifted of his chaplain, his fecretary, and two pages; befides thefe, his nephew, who is one of the canons, lived with him, and his great nephew, my travelling companion, was occafionally there. The pages wait at his table, and attend him when he goes from home. The remainder of their time is occupied with Atudies, and when qualified, they rife into the priefthood, and, admitted to the table, become companions, till a living offers to which the bifhop can prefent them. The padre cura, that is, the rector of $S$. Andres de Aguera, had been one of theefe, and whilft I was at Oviedo, an amiable young page was ordained prieft, faid his firf mafs, and fat down with us at table.

Having been recommended by count Campomanes to the intendant, I fometimes, with the canon, frequented his tertulla, or evening affembly, where I never failed to meet the count de Peñalba, a friend of Campomanes. Here I found two apartments, one for cards, the other for converfation; both neat; the former fpacious and well proportioned. The company affembled in the card room was numerous; their game was lottery, a game requiring neither judgjudgment nor memory; but the room for converfation was deferted. The count indeed was fo polite as to quit the card-table; but as I felt that I had no right to expect fuch a facrifice, I fraid only a fhort time, and than either cormented the bihop, who was no Frenchman, with my miferable Spanifh, or, when I thought that I had fufficiently trefpaffed on his goodnefs, I retired to my room.

A few days after my arrival, I was prefent at a grand proceflion of the bihhop, with his canons, attended by the principal inhabitants, carrying torches, and preceded by the afhes of Santa Eululia, to implore rain from heaven. But this patronefs of the diocefe, deaf to their petitions, would not intercede for one refrefhing thower, and in confequence the maize was fcorched up, and produced but little grain. Being at the time in bloffom, it required daily hhowers to prevent the blight.

From the frequency of proceffions, the confumption of wax becomes confiderable in every part of Spain, more efpecially where the country is not watered, either by tivers or by the noria. But I am inclined B 3 to think, that the fame expence, if properly applied, would in moft places fecure a never failing fupply of water, and pay good intereft for the capital employed. Government is fenfible of this, and with a view to watering, as well as to navigation, encourages the canals, not as with us, by leaving this moft important work to privata adventurers, but as a national concern, at the nątịonal expence.

After the proceffion, I went to vifit the Hofpicio, or seneral work-houfe, and found the numbers confined to be, men, fixtyfive ; boys, fifty-five; women, ninety; girls, feventy; not including infants out at nurfe. The houfe is large and commodious, confifting of four fpacious quadrangles, three fories high, and perfectly well fitted up, with comfortable work-rooms and dormitories. Some of thefe I found two hundred and fifty feet in length, lofty and wide. To fupport this eftabligment, the funds are thiitty thoufand ducats annually, arifing from Jicences to fell brandy in the Afturias; three thoufand from rents of land; and fome other emoluments; being together equal to four thoufand pounds fterling, befides the produce of their labour, which is ftated at three thoufand reales, or thirty pounds per annum, including what they make for their own confumption. Among the two hundred and eighty perfons thut up in this hofpicio, I faw no cripples, fo that their labour may be fairly reckoned at two hillings and three halfpence each per annum. The expence of every pauper to the public is not fo eafily calculated, becaufe they receive all deferted children. Here the mother has nothing to do but to put the child into the cradle, ring the bell, and then retire.

Befides this refuge for the poor, and for their children, the bifhop caufes feventy reales to be diftributed every morning at his gates, giving either a quarto or an ochavo to all who come, and weekly penfions both to widows and to orphans. In addition to all this, the canons fcatter their alms plentifully as they walk the ftreets; and the fix convents adminifter bread and broth at noon, more efpecially the Benedictines, who, as the moft wealthy, are moft liberal in their donations. When fick, the poor have a commodious hofpital always ready to receive them.

[ 8 ]

- Notwithftending all that hás been done, and what more, in the way of charity, can be devifed? beggars, clothed in rags, and covered with vermin, fwarm in every ftreet. Is it not therefore evident, that they have done too much, increafing both the numbers and the diftreffes of the poor by the very means, which have been employed to relieve their wants.

What incitement can we here find to induftry? for, who will dig a well when he may draw water from the fountain? Is hehungry? the monafteries will feed him. Is he fick? an hofpital flands open to receive him. Has he children? he need not labour to fupport them; they are well provided for without his care. Is he too lazy to go in fearch of food? he need only retire to the hofpicio.

Dry up the fountain, and every man will inftantly begin to dig a well; burn the hofpicio, or diffipate its funds; give no relief but as a reward, that it may prove a ftimulus to induftry, and although at firt the diftrefs will be increafed, and the population will be diminifhed, yet, as the fruit of that induftry, which cẹn fpring only from from diftrefs, the population will afterwards advance in a conftant and regular progreffion; wealth will be diffufed; and diftrefs will be confined to the cottage of the flothful.

I was exceedingly pleafed with the anfwer of the bifhop, when I one day took the liberty to afk him, if he did not think he was doing harm by the diftribution of alms. " Moft undoubtedly," faid he; " but ": then it is the part of the magiftrate to " clear the ftreets of beggars; it is my " duty to give alms to all that afk."

Among the widows penfioned by the bifhop, were many who had lived in affuence whilft they had hufbands. Thefe were the widows of lawyers, who are numerous, and fpend all their gains.

I went afterwards with don Antonio Durand, and don Francifco Roca, to vifit the hofpital, of which the former is phylician, the latter furgeon. The moft remarkable cafes were, tertians, dropfies, and a difeafe peculiar to this province, called Mal de la Rofa.

The tertians were only remarkable, as yielding to the lancet, followed by emetics, cathartics, cathartics, and the bark. Perhaps the lattes were the really efficacious remedies, and all the merit of the former might be merely negative. The dropfies were foon cured by cathartics, and abfinence from drink, allowing no liquid but half a pint of wine in twenty-four hours.

[ 10 ]

The Mal de Rofa has been confidered as a fpecies of the leprofy; but to me it appears to have no affinity with that difeafe. It attacks the back of the hands, the infteps, and the neck, where it defcends the fternum, almoft to the cartilago ziphoides, but the reft of the body is free. At firft it appears red, accompanied with pain and heat, but ends in fcuif. In the progrefs of this difeafe, vertigo and delirium fucceed, with foul tongue, laffitude, chillinefs, tears, and, according to the teftimony of Dr. Durand, a peculiar propenfity to drown themfelves. It goes away in fummer, and returns in fpring. The difeafe may be cured by nitre and gentle cathartics; but, if neglected, it terminates in fcrophula, marafma, melan. choly, and madners.

At Oviedo, as in mof of the great towns in Spain, an hofpital for the lues is opened 8

three times in the year, to receive as many as the hofpital will hold; but the furgeons all over the peninfula complain that patients are tardy in their application. This may arife either from the violence of their treatment, or from the mildnefs of the fymptoms; but whatever caufe may be affigned, the confequence is, the univerfal prevalence of that complaint.

The difeafes which feem to be endemical in the Afturias, are, intermittents, dropfies, hyfteria, hypochondriafis, ferophula, bronchocele, glandular obfructions, cachexics, fcurvy, leprofy, madnefs, epilepfy, attended with worms, apoplexy, and palfy, rheumatifm, phthifis, and erifipelas, with the mal de rofa, and the farna, or the itch.

For the leprofy they have in the Afturias twenty hofpitals, called Lazaros. It appears in various forms. Some patients are covered over with a white dry fcurf, and look like millers; in others the fkin is almoft black, very thick, full of wrinkles, unctuous, and covered with a loathfome cruft; others have one leg and thigh enormoully fwelled, and full of varices, puftules, anċ and ulcers, fending forth a moft abominable frell. All complain of heat, with moft intoierable itching. Some patients, inftead of the great leg, have a moft enormous fwelling of one hand, more efpecizlly the female fubjects, or elfe have the features of the face fwoln to fuch a degree, as hardly to retain the human form; others again have carbuncles, big as hazle nuts, all over the furface of their body.

The common itch (fcabies) is little lefs difgufting than the leprofy, thas tranfiently defcribed. It ufually attacks the heads of children, and is attended with ulcers of the fouleft nature, itching intolerable, and lice innumerable. It is commonly preceded by horripilation and a frebricula, which terminate in the expulfion of numerous little pimples like the fmall pox. Thefe, in healthy fubjects, are large, pointed, red, quickly fuppurating; but at the end of nine or ten months they go away. Bad fuojects have this difeafe for life. The females are more expofed to it than males.

Agues, fevers, and even pleurifies, are faid often to terminate in fcabies, and this frequently gives place to them, returning however however when the fever ceafes. In adults it takes pofleffion of the hands and arms, with the legs and thighs; covering them with a filthy cruft. In wet weather the itching becomes more troublefome, and towards midnight is infupportable. The patients, who labour under this difeafe, breed firones, a kind of vermin exceedingly minute, yet vifible without the affintance of a lens, which form channels between the cuticle and the fkin.

The predifpofing caufe of all thefe difeares may be fought for in humidity, arifing from the peculiar fituation of this province. This hilly country, bounded on the north by the Bay of Bifcay, and to the fouth by fnowy mountains, is always temperate, and generally moift. The N. E. wind indeed is dry, attended with a bright $\mathrm{k} y$, and with a bracing air, but with every other wind the fun is obfcured by clouds. The north wind always produces the moft dreadful tempefts, and the N. W. is little better; both bring rain in fummer, and the weft wind comes loaded at all times with moifture from the Atlantic Ocean. In May, June, and Juiy, they feldom fee the fun; but then, to balance this, in Auguft and September they as feldom fee a cloud. The coaft is temperate, and comparatively free from rain; but fuch is the moifture of the hills, that no care is fufficient to preferve their fruits, their grain, their infruments of iron, from mould, from rot, from ruft. Both the acetous and the putrid fermentation here make a rapid progrefs.

[ 14 ]

Befides the relaxing humidity of the climate, the common food of the inhabitants contributes much to the prevalence of moft difeafes, which infeft this principality. They eat little flefh; they drink little wine. Their ufual diet is Indian corn, with beans, peas, chefnuts, apples, pears, melons, and cucumbers; and even their bread, made of Indian corn, has neither barm nor leaven, but is unfermented, and in the face of dough. Their drink is water.

This account, coilected from gentlemen of the profefion, is confirmed in the valuable work of don Gafpar Caffal, an old phyfician, of more than common obfervation and experience, who has given to the public a natural hiftory of the Afturias.

- Although fubject to fuch a variety of endemical difeafes, few countries can produce more examples of longevity. Many live to the age of a hundred, fome to a hundred and ten, and others much longer. The fame obfervation may be extended to Gallicia, where, in the parifh of S. Juan de Poyo, A. D. 1724 , the curate adminifered the facrament to thirteen perfons, whofe ages together made one thoufand four hundred and ninety-nine, the youngeft of thefe being one hundred and ten, and the oldeft one hundred and twenty-feven. But in Villa de Fofinanes, one Juan de Outeyro, a poor labourer, died in the year 1726 , aged more than one hundred and forty-fix years.

When we confider the temperature of the climate, arifing from its humidity, together with the cooling winds from the Atlantic, and from the fnowy mountains, we muft naturally expect to find inftances of protracted age, with the prevalence of chronical complaints, and of fuch maladies as are feldom mortal: whereas in warmer and in drier climates, nature comes fooner to maturity, is fubject to more acute difeafes, and, like combultibles, when burning with a vivid flame, is rapidly confumed.

The phyfician reported a cafe too fingular to be eafly forgotten : a young man, aged twenty-eight, complaining of a fever, was bled twice without relief; and having fome fymptoms which indicated a different treatment, they gave him a bitter purge, which brought from him, in one day, one hundred and feventy - three large worms, (the teretes). Five days after this he paffed one hundred twenty-four, and the next day feventy-three, and died.

From the general hofpital, I went with don Nicolas Trelles to vifit an hofpital for pilgrims, of which he is chaplain and confeffor. It is a miferable building, with a wretched hall, and numerous cells, by way of bed-rooms. Here pilgrims from every quarter of the globe, who are going to proftrate themfeives before the altar of S. Jago, in Gallicia, are received and lodged for three nights. When they arrive in Oviedo, they prefent themfelves before one particular altar, and receive every man ten

[ 17 ]

Gutartos. Should he chance to die here, hè is buried with more pomp, than the firft nobleman of the province, and is attended by all the canons to the grave. wicus.

The rage for pilgrimage is much abated; but there are people living, who remember when it was the fafhion for all young men of fpirit, both in Italy and France, before they married, to go as pilgrims to S. Jago; and even now it is not uncommon to fee ftraggling rome few old men, and many companies of young ones, purfuing the fame route. We met twelve fine made fellows, who came from Navarre, finging the rofary, and haftening towards the next convent, where they expected to lodge, and receive more money for the journey.
S. Jago, if I am not mintaken, was the firf who preached the gofpel to the Spaniards ; but however this may be, their des votion fprings from gratitude; and the reverence of all furrounding nations; who are acquainted with his military fame, is the juft reward of his undaunted prowefs, when, mounted on a white horfe, he appeared in the air fighting againft the infidels, and putting them to flight before Vol. II. . C Ramiro,

Ramiro, at the battle of Simancas. (A. Do 927.)

The fight of pilgrims naturally reminded me of relics, and excized a curiofity to vifit thofe of the cathedral; and for that purpofe I made application to the bifhop, who the next morning fent his nephew, the canon, to fhew me every thing moft curious among their treafures. Tradition fays, but I do not undertake to vindicate the truth of its seport, nor indeed would our good bifhop; tradition fays, and our good bifhop, with becoming modefty, confiders it as poffible, that when Cofroes, king of Perfia, pillaged Jerufalem, God, by his omnipotence, $\tan$ fported a cheft of incorruptible wood, made by the immediate followers of the apoftes, and filled with relics, from Jerufalem, by way of Africa, to Carthagena, Seville, and Toledo, and from thence, with the infant don Pelayo, to the facred mountain near to Oviedo, and finally to the cathedral church of San Salvador. Upon its being opened, by the command of the fovereign Alonzo the Great, in the prefence of affembled prelates, they found portions of all the following articles: the Rod of Mofes; the

[ 19 ]

Manna which fell from heaven; the Manto tle of Elias; the Bones of the Holy Innocents; the Branch of Olive which Chrift bore in his hand when he entered Jerufalem; great part of the true Crofs; eight Thorns of his Crown ; the Sanctifimo Sudario, or napkin ftained with his blood; the Reed, which he bore by way of fceptre; his Garment; his Sepulchre; the Milk of the Bleffed Virgin; the Hood, which - The gave to S. Ildefonfo archbifhop of Toledo; one of the three Crucifixes carved by Nicodemus; and a Crofs of the pureft gold, made by angels in the cathedral.
" Whofoever, called of God, fhall vifit " thefe precious relics, fhall obtain remif" fion of one-third of the punifhment due " to his fins, with indulgence for a thou" fand and four years, and fix quarentines, "\&c. \&c." Thus at leaft runs the promife, in the name of the pope, and by authority of the bihop; yet I doubt much, if thus worded, the promife be agreeable to the faith of catholics. All their bifhops and men of learning, with whom I have $\mathrm{C}_{2} \rightarrow \mathrm{bad}$ had the honour to converfe, have folemnily affured me, that without repentance, and a firm belief in the atonement, no power upon earth can abfolve the guilty; and that the church claims no prerogative refpecting indulgences, but that of remitting the punifhment, which would ocherwife be endured in purgatory by thofe, who fhall not have performed the penance appointed by the charch for each particular offence. When they promife forty days indulgence, or as many forty days as fhall make one thoufand and four years, they do not mean abfolutely days and years, as if endlefs duration could be divided into portions, to be meafured by the rotation of the earth, for they hold fucceffion to be inconfiftent with the idea of eternity; but they mean, if I underftand them right, the remiffion of fuch a portion or quantity of punifhment as fhall be equal to forty days, or one thoufand and four years penance, fhould their lives be protracted to fuch a period as would aillow them to perform the whole. When the points of difference between proteftants and papifts fhall be fairly and diftinctly fated, the the fubjects of difpute will vanifh, or at leaft the contending parties will have the better chance of coming to agreement.

Some days after I had examined all thefe relics; the Sanctiffimo Sudario, or facred napkin, on which the Redeemer, during his paffion, impreffed his image, was expofed in the cathedral to eight or ten thoufand peafants, collected from all the furrounding villages, moft of whom had balkets full of cakes and bread, which they elevated as high as poffible the inftant the curtain was withdrawn, in the full perfuafion that thefe cakes, thus expofed, would acquire virtue to cure or to alleviate all difeafes. Many lifted up their beads, and every one had fomething or other to receive the divine energy, which he conceived to be conftantly proceeding from the facred image of his Lord. After a few minutes, one of the canons drew the curtain, and the multitude retired.

The monafteries in Oviedo are not highly interefting; yet two of them excited my curionty ; both of them belonging to the Benedicine order. The firf was of monks, whom I vifted for the fake of father Feyjoo,

\mathrm{C}_{3} \quad \text { whofe }

whofe fame has extended to the moft diftant nations. I went into his ce11, and cons verfed with thofe, who had reverenced him living. I examined the features of his buft, but this having been taken when the clay was no longer animated, it was from his works alone that I could form any judgment of his mind. All who are converfant with thefe, will agree with me in thinking him, for generak literature, the firft writer of the Spanim nation.

The convent of the Benedicine nuns I vifited chiefly on account of their great wealth. They are only fifty, and their revenue is allowed to be twenty thoufand ducats, or $f_{5} \cdot 2,1975^{5} .3^{\frac{3}{2} d}$. a year. They invited us to tea. I went with the canon and my young friend to their pariour ; and they affembled with the lady abbefs at the grate. Their converfation was lively, and their behaviour perfectly eafy. I ventured to folicit one of them to fing; the was, young and handfome, genteel and delicate, and her countenance was highly interefing; but when fhe began to chaunt a por tion of the litany, the made me flart; for having long fince forgotten all the fongs of infancyz infancy, and being accuftomed to fing only in the choir, her voice was become harfh and grating on the ear. When we took our leave, they invited us to repeat our vifit; but my curiofity was fatisfied, and my time was fhort.

The building itfelf is worthy of attention for its valt extent, and for its elegance.

The perfon to whom I was chiefly recommended was the count of Peñalba, a man of good abilities, of gentle manners, and of uncommon information, for a nobleman of Spain.

I went with him to fee the hot fprings of Rivera de Abajo, at the diftance of fome miles from Oviedo. The fituation is moft enchanting, in a little valley every where thut in by lofty mountains, excepting only a fmall outiet for the ftream. The rock is limeftone, and the waters refemble thofe of Bath, both in temperature and in tafte. The principal fpring rifes from the rock, and is near two inches in diameter. The baths are ill contrived, and feparated by a cold paffage from the dreffing rooms.

The virtues of thefe waters have not been afcertained, nor have they been analifed;

[ 24 ]

but the cafes, in which they have been chiefly recommended, are, rheumatifm, palfy, jaundice, and fterility; and for thefe they are in the higheft eftimation.

In the centre of the valley, on a little eminence, is a caftle with round towers, called San Juan de Priorio; and near to it a church, moft romantically placed, with a beabtiful back ground of oaks and chefnuts.

As we returned, we vifited a new manufacture of petroleum, eftablihed near the city, according to a plan fent from Paris by count d'Aranda, and which I underftand to be the fame with that invented by lord Dundonald. This will certainly become an object of importance, becauie coal every where abounds in the Afturias, although it has never yet been turned to profit, on account of its abominable fmell, arifing perhaps from the rock, between which it lies, and the fulphur, with which it is impregnated. It is well known, that alcali and fulphur form the liver of fulphur, than which nothing is more offenfive to the nofriils. Now the whole province abounds with marle, chalk, gypfum, pifolite or cal* careous freoftone, limeftone; marble; and the rock, which confines the coal, is wholly calcareous. But flould they ever penetrate this fratum, and find the coal in fchift, I have no doubt that their coal would ceafe to be offenfive. At prefent they have not fufficient encouragement to work there mines, becaufe the country abounds with wood, and the prejudice againft coai is fo ftong, that men, to whom the multitude look up, have not fcrupled to attribute all the confumptive difeafes of our illand to the prevailing ufe of coal.

[ 25 ]

The limefone of this province every where abounds with foffil fhells.
TQ the weft of Oviedo the foil is gypfeous, but they make no faltpetre, nor is there any fign of nitrous earth.

The trees are, elm, afh, poplars, and a fpecies of the oak, called robles, an appellation perhaps derived from robur. In the low lands they get two crops in the year, taking after barley either maize or flax. Their wheat is very fine.

The ploughs about Oviedo are, without exception, the worft I ever faw, and perhaps the worft which the imagination can conceive.

[ 26 ]

conceive. The coulter is fued in a beam by itfelf, with two oxen and one man to wom it. This goes firt, then foliows the plough in the fame tract, with no iron excepting at the point of the fhare. The handle is curved, to ferve the purpofe of meets, and has a mortice to receive the tenon of the beam, and itelf is morticed into the tail of the fhare. It has a retch to raife and to deprefs it. The whole is made in the mof clumfy manner, and at beft can only fcratch the ground, which, being monty frong land, requires to be well ploughed.

The harrows have no iron, and are only ufed for maize; the wheat and barley being always left unharrowed.

The cart wheel has no fpokes, but confifts of a wooden ring or felloe, compofed of four quadrants, and is bifected by a plank of about eight or ten inches wide, to receive the axis, which, being faftened to the wheel, turns round with it, making what is called an axis in peritrocheo. Some of thefe, for heavy work, are bound with iton, and have fike nails with enormous heads. I had the curiofity to meafure the axis, and found found it commonly more than eight inches diameter, but fometimes ten; yet, I muft confefs, that I was not furprifed at finding this quantity of friction overlooked in the Afturias, having obferved fo little attention paid to it even in England, where, till within thefe few years, the large wooden axis was univerfal ; and where, even in the prefent day, few farmers have adopted iron.

To fet any matter in a proper light, it is often neceflary to view it in the two oppofite extremes. Now it muft be evident, that were it poffible to have the axis, of the fame diameter with the circumference of the wheel; the friction would not be in the leaft abated, but would, as may be proved, and has been proved by the moft accurate experiments, be equal to onethird of the whole weight moving on a fmooth furface. Were it poffible to reduce the axis to a mathematical line, friction would altogether vanih. Having found the two extremes, the imagination readily feizes a general idea of the proportions which lie between them. Let us however examine thefe proportions with a more minute minute atention. It is evident, that in the former cafe, always fuppofing the plain to be hotizontal, a power more than equal to one ton would be neceffary to move three tons; whereas in the latter cafe, a fly would give motion to ten thoufand tons.

Stating the diameter of the wheels to be four feet, and that of the axis to be eight inches, which are the ufual dimenfions in the Afturias, fomething more than one ton would move eighteen tons; but, fuppofing the wheels to be five feet high, and the diameter of the axis to be two inches and an half, then fomething more than one ton would fet in motion feventy-two tons, the friction being always directly as the diameter of the axis, and inverfely as the diameter of the wheel. Here I mult take occafion to obferve, that in point of frictions to diminifh the axis will be found more advifeable than to increafe the diameter of the wheel, becaufe the frition will be in proportion to the diameter; whereas, the degree of Atrength being given, the weight of the wheel will be nearly as the fquare of the diameter. Whilft the motion is horizontal on a plain, which is perfectly perfectly hard; wheels which are nigh, and confequently heavy, will have no other difadvantage than the fuperior con, but on foft roads, and in moving either up hill or down, the weight of the wheels muft not be overlooked, nor muf the diameter be difregarded. The weight in both cafes tells againft the horfe; but, as to the diameter, a diftinction mult be made. Going up hill, in proportion as you elevate the axis above the horfes breaft, fo as for the line of draft to make an angle with the hill, in the fame proportion you lofe power. The truth of this propolition may be caught by moving in imagination the line of draft up and down in two oppolite extremes. Elevate or deprefs it, till it becomes perpendicular ; the whole force of the horfe will tell for nothing, and he will act only like a $\log$ of wood equal to him in weight. Let the line of draft make an angle of $45^{\circ}$ with the plain, on which the waggon is afcending, and one half of the force will be loft. In like manner by the compofition and refolution of forces, the exact proportion of lofs may be afcertained. In going down hill, the diminution of friction, which is directly as the diameter of the wheels, makes it needful to create new friction by chaining the wheels, or by a fliding piece to prevent their rotation.

In the Afturias, not fatisfied with the quantity of friction arifing from a wooden axis of eight inches diameter revolving without greafe, they fix two wooden pins, which confine the axis in its place, fo near together, that they bind hard againft it; and this they do only for the fake of the noife arifing from the friction, and which, whilf it appears to lull the oxen, and to incline both them and the driver to fleep, as they move flowly on, is confidered as exciting them to labour, and thereby precluding the neceffity of either fpeaking to them or pricking them with goads. This mufic, refembling the found of a poft-boy's horn, is heard from morning to night in every part of the Afturias, and, when at a great diftance, is not unpleafant even to a ftranger, but to the native peaiant it appears to be the never-failing fource of calm enjoyment.

horfes, and confequently beef is cheap, being fold for ten quarts the pound of twentyfour ounces, which is $I_{8}^{7}$ penny for a pound of fixteen ounces; mutton is fourteen quarts for the Afturian pound, or $2 \frac{5}{8}$ penny for fixteen ounces, including the alcavala, millones, and arbitrio. The bihop tells me, that within his memory provifions were exactly half the prefent prices. Barley is twenty reales; maize or Indian corn, thirty; French beans, forty; wheat, from forty to fifty the fanega, which in the Afurias differs little, as I apprehend, from one Englifh burhel and an half; wheat therefore is from $5 s .4 d$. to $6 s$. $8 d$. a buihel, or about $6 s$. on the average. rowothers

Monday, Auguft 21, I went with my young friend to pay a vifit for a few days to his father at Aviles, on the fea coaft, about five leagues from Oviedo.

The occafion of this vifit was to be prefent at the feria, or church feaft, which in catholic countries all over the world, and even among proteftants in a degree, gives occafion to much traffic, and is confidered as a licentious feafon.

thèy are making at a vaft expence, and in a moft fubftantial manner, without the leaf attention to economy, or to any thing but their own ideas of utility and beauty. For fome miles near to Oviedo, and likewife near to Aviles, the road is made perfectly frraight, very wide, and rounded in the middile. The foundation is laid with large maffes of limeftone rock, covered with ftones broken to a fmaller fize; and, to fupport the arch, which they apprehend would fpread like the arches of an edifice, fuppofing them to have no lateral fupport, they abfolutely build two walls the whole extent of way. This certainly contributes much to beauty, but not in the leaft to the principal purpofe for which it is defigned. The fides of the road being planted with trees, makes it a delightful walk for the inhabitants.

The ambition of Spaniards, in aiming at perfection, is no where more vifible than near Aviles. The ancient road turned about two hundred yards, in order to avoid a low and fwampy meadow; but now, at a vaft expence, they are determined to have a ftraight and facious avenue of near three miles, miles, like thofe of other cities. From Oviedo to Gijon, a little fea-port to the eaft of Aviles, they are making another road in the fame flyle, and at fimilar expence.

[ 33 ]

Aviles contains eight hundred families, with two pariih churches, three convents, and two hofpitals, of which one is for old women, the other for pilgrims going to San Jago. They have no manufactures, except of copper and brafs pans for the furrounding villages, and of fome thread for their own confumption.

Aviles is fituated on the bank of a little river, about one league from the fea, but within reach of the tide. It is every where furrounded by hills, which, for the moft part, are fertile to their fummits, and are either covered with flocks or haded by the roble and the chefriut; whilf the low lands are loaded with luxuriant crops of wheat and maizè.

The houfe of my young friend is one of. the moft commodious I have feen. After the farhion of the country, it is built round à court, but with only half the ufual corridor; for commonly this runs all round the
Vol. II.

court, like that fill feen in fome of our great old inns. In this houfe the gallery is wide, and open to the fouth, and to the morning fun. The ground floor is given up wholly to the fervants, except one corner occupied by a chapel. The apartments are, a dining-room, a drawing-room; both fpacious and lofty; one to the weft, looking to the ftreet, the other to the eaft, commanding a lovely profpect, which is bounded by the fea; four principal bed-chambers, and others inferior. Of thefe, two only were fingle bedded; the reft contained, two, three ${ }_{i}$ or upon occafion, four beds; for in $$$ pain, even in refpectable families, three or four gentlemen will occafionally occupy one foom.

Cuftom reconciles to this; and, by the practice of Scotland, France, and Spain, I fee clearly that other nations can be reconciled to that which is moft difgufting to an Englifhman; and certain it is, by what we fee daily in our cottages of the poor peafants, that our olfactory nerves may be reduced to fuch a degree of torpid infenfibility, as to be happy and contented in the midft of flth and naftinefs.

[ 35 ]

In this refpect, no nation can furpars the Spaniards; who, without difguft; without regard to decency; when lodging thus together in one room, conceal only by a napkin that, which the French fhut up in boxes, and hide in the little clofet, where they keep their clothes. wheterest Upon occafion of the church feaft or feria, which, by the by, marks the origin of our word Fair, the concourfe of Arangers: to Aviles is confiderable, and every gentleman opens his houfe for the reception of his friends. At this feafon the morning is fpent in lounging about to view the fhops, the cattle, and the people affembled in the fair; and the evening is clofed by dancing. The balls are given by the principal perfon in the city, and fuch is the fimplicity, which reigns in this diftant province, that the fervants and peafants are allowed to crowd about the entrance of the room to fee the dance. The mof favourite dances are the Englif, the minuet and the country dance; but fometimes they dance the cotillion, and, towards the clofe of the evening, the fandango.

of the fair, and remarkably fine, the concourfe of people; with the multitude of cattle, was furprifing, and the market was brifk. As proteftants, we muft be allowed to wonder at this practice.

Beef here is fold for feven quarts and an half the pound of twenty-four ounces, and mutton eleven; bread, five quarts for the pound of twenty ounces; wheat, thirty-two reales the fanega, which weighs a quintal, and which, if fuppofed equal to the quintal of Catalonia, will be ninety-two pounds Englifh; barley and maize, twenty-eight reales; beans, thitty-fix.

It is friking to obferve how corn finds its..level all over Europe, whilf butchers meat, which is not of fuch eafy tranfport, varies exceedingly in price. Thus, at Aviles, beef is under three halfpence; mutton is $2 \frac{2}{76}$ pence for a pound of fixteen ounces, whilf bread is $I_{\frac{T}{5}}$ penny for the fame weight.

No difinction in price is made between the prime pieces and the coarfe, nor between fat meat and lean, becaufe the prices are fixed by the magiftrate; without refpect to quality. The consequence of this arrangement rangement is, that the meat is never fo good as it might be, were the market free.

The government of this city is in two corregidors, four regidors, and a fyndic, who is annually chofen by the people to infpect the meat, to vindicate their rights, and take care upon all occafions, that juftice fhall be done to them.

Whilft I continued at Aviles, I difcovered, for the firft time, that the vifit is always to the lady; that the mafter of the family is perfectly at liberty to come or go; that there is no neceffity to take notice of him; and that, if the daughter is handfomer than her mother, fhe may, without offence, occupy the whole attention. This idea I found afterwards confirmed in the great metropolis, by feeing gentlemen introduced to ladies of the firf fafhion, and vifiting them on the mof familiar footing, without the leaf acquaintance, or even perfonal knowledge, of their hubands.

The fcience and practice of medicine are at the loweft ebb in Spain, but more efpecially in the Afturias. Fiat venefectio is ftill the favourite prefcription, notwithfanding the ridicule of Le Sage, and the ferious reafoning of Feyjoo. When the fond hufband meets the phyician in the freet, and urges him to ftep in to fee his wife, Sangrado pulls out at once his lift of patients and his watch, tells him that he can not fop one moment, orders him inftantly to fetch the furgeon, and to have her blooded, promifing faithfully to fee her in the fpace of half an hour. Palhes moft undoubtedly are frequent, but it is by no means clear, that thefe are always caufed by plethora, although in many cafes they certainly originate from fulneis. Sangrado however has fuch a dread of palfy, that he bleeds his patient into a dropfy, or leaves him to languin between life and death, a prey to the mont gloomy of all difeafes, to which humanity is fubject.

At the requeft of the bifhop, I vifited a friend of his, an old canon, who was threatened with a pally by his phyficians. He had been twice blooded, and the quefion was, whether he fhould lofe more blood. $I$ went to him immediately, and found him furrounded by his friends, who all ftood looking on, expecting every moment to fee the fatal frroke, whilft he, fitting in his great arm chair, apparently in perfect health, yet with a gloomy and dejected countenance, feemed to be waiting for the awful moment, without one ray of hope to cheer his mind. Thofe of his friends, who could be fared from bufinefs, continued with him; his neighbours dropped in to look upon him; but all continued filent, excepting fuch of them as thought it needful to afl him from time to time how he felt. No one entered into converfation with him, nor would they fuffer him to look into a book. Notwithftanding this repeated venefection, his pulfe was remarkably full and ftrong. He was of a certain age, lived well, and took no exercife. I could not hefitate what advice to give. At my requeft the room was cleared; he adopted the vegetable diet, and took exercife. Thus by degrees his fears were diflipated, and he returned once more to join the little circle of his friends in their innocent amufements.

At the defire of my friend at Aviles, $\mathbf{I}$ went to vifit a monk, who was related to the family, and found the good old man crying with agony of pain, arifing from the ftone. The phyfician ordered nothing but.

Madame Stevens Solvent; but this was too flow in its operation, and could give no prefent eafe from pain. I ordered the Enema Moliens, by way of warm fomentation, to be ufed immediately, and to be repeated, if occafion flould require; but the firft application gave relief, and all the monks crowded round me to confult, each for himfelf, what would be proper for his complaint. Among all thofe, who came to me, I did not find one, who was not afflicted either with the ftone, the gravel, or with the hypochondriacal difeafe. For this I could affign no other caufe, but their inactive life, and the want of animating hope; both common to the cloiftered tribe.

From the monks I was fent for to a convent of nuns, where I was confirmed in my idea, that man is formed not only for focial life, for that is found in convents, but for domeric cares. Without a purfuit the mind muft languifh, and the health will fuffer. The two nuns, whofe friends had requefted my advice, were hectic, and I am fatisfied that others, who confulted me, were running the fame courfe. Nature certainly never intended them for nuns. Other confiderations apart; the feverity of their difcipline, their rifing at midnight from a warm bed to go into a cold chapel, is ill fuited to the delicacy of the female fex, and muft be inevitable ruin to the tender conftitution.

I was much pleafed with the good fenfe, and flattered by the confidence of the lady abbefs. When the was defcribing a difeafed breaft, and I had faid, "If this young " lady were my fifter, I hhould defire to fee "the breaft;" fhe anfwered, "Every lady " is fifter to the phyfician who attends " her;" and immediately defired the nun to go with me to a parlour. On examination I found it was a cancerous cafe, and recommended them to make application to a furgeon.

After having paffed ten days very pleafantly at Aviles, I went with the count Penalba to flay as many at Luanjo, or, as we fhould pronounce it, Luanco.

Luanjo has three hundred and feventy houres, and one thoufand eight hundred fouls, of which one thoufand three hundred go to confeffion and communion, the other five hundred are infants. It is a little-fea port, and carries on a coafting trade.

[ 42 ]

The ride from Aviles to Luanjo is chiefly on the fea coaft. When we arrived, the fun was fet, and the evening was thut in.

The habitation of the count is maffive, chiefly calculated for ftrength, and to refift the waves, which always wanh its folid bafe, and occafionally breaking againft the houfe, fend their foaming fpray over the lofty roof into the ftreet. Whillt I was there I was fo fortunate as to be witnefs to this fight. To enter the dwelling, you pafs through the coach-houfe, and find the ground fioor given up to ftables.

When we arrived, the great hall was al. ready occupied, as ufual, by the neighbours, who were amufing themfelves with cards; but, as we were under no obligation to join the party, which was not of the genteeleft caft, we went up ftairs, and took poffeffion of a room which occafionally ferves for eating.

The family confifted of the count and countefs, with their children, his two fifters, and her mother. His brother, a genteel young officer, was there upon a vifit. The family being thus numerous, and the greateft portion of the houfe being occupied pied with offices, little remained for bedrooms. Thefe were few in number, and upon a contracted fcale. The room, in which I flept, was about eleven feet by fourteen, yet contained two beds, one for me, the other for the brother of the count. The walls are white limed, the floors are fmoothed with the addice, but not one is plained, and I do not recollect one ceiling. The beds have no curtains. The great hall where we dined is a double cube of about fifty by five and twenty; with there dimenfions, if well fitted up, it would be elegant.

[ 43 ]

The file of living refembled the old Britiih horpitality; and the long oak table, furrounded by ftrong oak benches, was every day well covered.

I was at firft furprifed, and much difgufted, with a ragged and half naked vifitor, who came up at dinner time, walked round the table, fpoke freely to all the family, but in a manner to me quite unintelligible, fat down occafionally at the bottom of the taple, and fometimes feized a bone, then laughed and chattered like a baboon; yet, with all this, appeared to give no offence. Upon enquiry, I found that this miferable object was the idiot of the village; and, as fuch, enjoyed the privilege of going where he pleafed, and of doing what he pleafed, without reftraint.

Nothing can exceed their fimplicity of manners in this diftant province. Polifhed nations would be offended at their freedom, and the plainnefs with which they fpeak of things, which in the more advanced ftate of fociety muft not be even hinted at ; yet fuch language neither gives difguf, nor tends to excite the paffions. But at the fame time familiarities, fuch as in other countries are efteemed innocent, and, being rightly underfood, neither imply nor lead to guilt, would here, and all over Spain, be highly offenfive; would, if practifed in public, excite univerfal horror, if in private, level every fence which virtue is engaged to maintain.

They ufe no paint, no powder, no curls, no cap; nothing but a bit of riband bound round the head. In this fimplicity of drefs, youth and beauty may enjoy their triumph; but but the old women, for want of borrowed charms, have nothing which can pleafe the eye. Yet gentlemen are not altogether void of attention to them, nor are they infenfible to thefe attentions. A tradefman of Lu anjo had cut his little portion of tobacco, and had rolled it up carefully in a ftrip of paper, making a cigar about the fize of a goofe quill; he had doubled back, and pinched carefully the ends; then with mature deliberation, taking up his fteel, his flint, and his little bit of amadou (boletus igniarius) he ftruck a light, kindled his cigar, began to fmoke, and finding it work well, he prefented it to the countefs. She bowed and took it, fmoked it half out, and reftored it to him again.

After the countefs had done with the cigar, and had joined the converfation, in a few minutes the opened her mouth, and fent out a cloud of fmoke. She faw my furprife, and afked the caufe of it. I told her; and immediately the perfon who was fmoking drew in fome hearty whiffs, then opened his mouth to convince me tltat nothing continued there, and after many minutes he breathed out volumes of fmoke.

fmoke. This I find is their common mode of fmoking; and without making it pafs through their lungs they think it ufelefs.

The government of Luanjo is in a corregidor affifted by eight or ten regidors and two fyndics, who are to protect the people from oppreffion. Thefe magittrates once a year make a contract with the butcher, who will fupply the market cheapeft. In confequence of this agreement, beef fells for feven quarts; mutton, ten; bread, fix per pound of twenty-four ounces. According to this, fuppofing the pound to be fixteen ounces, beef will be $\boldsymbol{I}_{\mathrm{T}^{\frac{5}{8}}}$ penny; mutton, $I_{\frac{7}{8}}^{7}$ bread, $I_{\frac{1}{8}}$ per pound.
Labour is from three to five reales a day, or, without fractions, from feven pence to a fhilling.
The land in all this province is eftimated by the dia de buyes, or quantity which a yoke of oxen is fuppofed to plough in one day: but this differs in every diftrict. About Oviedo they reckon the dia de buyes at fixty varas by thirty, or eighteen hundred fquare varas; at Luanjo it is fixtyfour by forty-eight, or three thoufand and fixty:

[ 47 ]

fixty-two ; and about Gijon they call it feventy by thirty-five, or two thoufand four hundred and fifty varas fquare ; but in general the dia de buyes may be taken for about half an acre.

Near Luanjo the land produces, of wheat, ten for one upon the feed, and as it pays one fanega, or about ninety-two pound of wheat for every dia de buyes, we may reckon the rent at about fixteen hillings the acre.

After fpending a few days at Luanjo, we went to Carrio, another country-houfe belonging to the count, or rather to the countefs, becaufe in Spain the property of the hufband, and of the wife are perfectly diftinct. As long as fhe lives no one can take it from her, and when the dies, it paffes to her children; or, fuppofing it to be entailed, it devolves immediately to her eldeft fon, who, at the age of twenty-one, or fooner if he marries, takes poffeffion, even though his father fhould be living. If the has titles of honour, fhe carries them with her to her huiband, and tranfmits them to her heir. Upon marriage, the huband makes a declaration of the effects belonging belonging feverally to himfelf and to his wife; and her property is fo much vefted in her, that, in cafe of her hufband's bankruptcy, his creditors have no power to touch it; but if at his death it is found that he has profpered in the world, fhe may claim her proportion of all the favings: The latter provifion is unqueftionably wife, but it may be imagined that the former muft give much fcope to fraud, and certainly it does; but then there are not wanting confiderations to make mén honeft. A tradefman of Oviedo, at marriage, gave in a falfe fpecification, with a view to defraud his creditors, fhould he unfortunately break. The wife died foon after, and her relations claimed all the effects of which he had ded livered in his declaration, as her propettys and he, who had been well to pafs previous to marriage, was left defitute, and could find no redrefs.

Carrio is a commodious habitation, neat and comfortable, but without higher pretenfions, fituated in the midft of a fertile country, near to a little river, and not far diftant from the fea. In the domeftic chapel, the count fhewed hewed me an altar, which is one folid block of marble, with the following infcription:

| Imp. Cæfari Augufto Divi F.  Cos. 13. Imp. 20. Pont. M. 10.  Patr. Patrix Trib. Pot. 32.    Sacrum. |

This block was found at Cape Tauris, near the entrance into Gïjn (Jixa of the Romans) and is mentioned, together with two others, difcovered near to the fame fpot, by Mariana and Morales.

From Carrio we rode intó Gijon, a confiderable port, to which the Englih refort for filberts and chefnuts. It contains about eight hundred families. This harbour, made and maintaised at a vaft expence, is not reckoned fafe; but there is no other in the vicinity; which can fland in competition with it.

We were entertained with great hofpitality by Don Francifco Paular Jove Llanos, a captain in the marine, who is retired from fervice. An old officer in every country is a pleafant companion, and in no country more fo than in Spain. In this gentleman

[ 50 ]

I found all that a foreigner can wifh for, good fenfe, politenefs, and great information.

The next morning, we returned by Carfio to Luanjo; and, in the way, ftopped in a beautiful meadow near Candace, to partake of a little fête champêtre.

At Peran, in this vicinity, in the limeftone rock, I met with a rich variety of extranecus foffils, of corals, corallines, and coralloides, with cockles, expofed by the fretting of the waves; and, upon examination, I traced this ftratum running up into the country much above the level of the fea.

During my refidence at Luanjo, the count fhewed me a royal ordinance, dated 22d October 1785 , ftating, That the principal caufe of the decay in agriculture was the unlimited power of the landlord to eject his tenants at the expiration of their leafes; and appointing, that, from henceforth, in the Afturias, the farmer, provided he cultivated well, and was not confiderably behind hand with his payments, fhould neither be ejected at the expiration of his term, nor have the rent raifed; referving both to the landiord and the tenant, an appeal to akilful perfons, who fhould regulate the value of the farm, and give a compenfation to the occupier, on his quitting it, for any improvements made either by himfelf or by his anceftors. This provifion, moft undoubtedly, is both wife and juft; becaufe it not only fimulates the induftry of the farmer, but encourages his parfimony, by fhewing him where he can immediately make all his gains productive, and thereby promotes the highef improvement of the foil. But, as for wifdom or juftice in the former provifion, I muft freely confefs, I can difcover neither. Every thing is worth what it will fetch; and if men, who wifh to find employment for their capitals, are willing to advance the rent, why fhould not the landlord avail himfelf of this? In mont countries, the ruling powers are too bufy, and will be meddling, when things would naturally, and without their interference, much better regulate themelves.

September in, I returned to Aviles, and the count went to fpend a few days at another country-houfe, whither he prefed E2 me me much to bear him company; but I had neither health nor firits for this excurfion.

The refembiance between the Afturias and many parts of England is very ftriking. The fame is the appect of the country, as to verdure, inclofures, live hedges, hedgerows, and woods; the fame mixture of woodlands, arable and rich pafure; the fame kind of frees, and crops, and fruit, and cattle.

Both fuffer by humidity in winter, yet, from the fame fource, find an ample recompenfe in fummer; and both enjoy a temperate climate, yet with this difference, that as to humidity and heat, the fcale preponderates on the fide of the Aiturias. In fheltered fpots, and not far diftant from the fea, they have olives, vines, and oranges.

The cyder of this country is not fo good as ours; but I am not able to determine, whether the fault is wholly in the making, or whether there is not likewife fome naw tural imperfection in the fruit. Certain it is, that they pay little attention to this article, neither fuffering the apples to hang the proper time upon the trees, nor felect-

ing the beft kinds, nor leaving them to fweat, nor picking out bad fruit, nor racking off the cyder when it is fine. The oppofite of all this, both as to the liquor and the fruit, is the practice of our beft cyder counties. Not contented with racking once, we draw it off three or four times, if needful, always obferving to do this when the cyder is become fine., For this purpofe, they, who are moft curious, will even fit up with it, when the time draws nigh, that they may feize the proper moment. If the Afturians paid attention to this, their cyder would become a confiderable article of export, and, together with their nuts, and other fruits, would bring great wealth into the country.-Yet, with the beft information and the moft minute attention, it is by no means certain, that they would ever be able to produce a liquor equal in ftrength to that of our beft counties, becaufe of the prevailing humidity; on account of which, every thing this principality produces is inferior in its quality to the productions of a warmer climate. The herbs here dry away to nothing; and the wood burnt upon the bearth, makes little or no ahes, yet prow E 3 duces

[ 54 ]

duces fop much foot, that the chimneys are perpetually cholzed. Such is the humidity of this province, that the milletoe grows not only on the oak, but on apples, pears, and thorns.

All the way from Aviles to Oviedo, we found the harveft over, and the people, men, women, and children, in the field threfhing out the grain with flails; becaufe, in this moift and temperate province, they cannot ufe the trillo.

Their flail is very heavy, and extravagantly long, not lefs than five feet in common, and the handftaff is nearly of the fame length. In confequence of this, the motion of the flail is flow, and the exertions of the threher turn to little account. To underfrand this fubject, we muft recollect the laws of motion. Now, when quick motion is communicated to the grain, whilft the ftraw remains unmoved, or when the flraw receives the ftroke, whilft the grain continues in a frate of reft, a feparation is the confequence. When either moves flowly, the other follows, and no feparation is effeeted; but the greater the velocity of either, the more certain and speedy is the reparation feparation of the grain. Suppofing the ftraw and grain to be moved with different velocities, the fame effect will follow in proportion to that difference. We muft always remember, that the weight of impinging bodies being given, the magnitude of the ftroke is directly as the velocity. This principle rightly underfood and applied, would not only long fince have banifhed heavy fails for threfhing the lighter grains, but would, from the beginning, have led to the machine for coining now recently introduced at Birmingham.

Threfhing is by no people better underftood than by the Wiltthire peafants, who for wheat prefer a flail of three feet, weighing about twenty-four ounces, with a handftaff of the fame length.

In the Afturias, they depend upon the wind for winnowing, and have no idea of a machine for performing that operation in a barn. Were they to fee the fan, formed after the model of a machine, firft invented by Reifelius of Wurtemberg, called rotatilis fuctor et preffor, but difcovered by Dr. Papin, and from Holland introduced into this illand; it is to be hoped, that, without either preE4 judice judice or fcruples, they would immediately adopt it ; and that no fanatic prieft, as in North Britain, would condemn the ufe of it as impious, under the idea of not depending upon providence for a fayourable breeze.

When I returned to Oviedo, a gentleman gave me a collection of amber and of jet, of which there is great abundance in this province; but the two moft confiderable mines of it are in the territory of Be loncia, one in a valley called Las Guerrias, the other on the fide of a high mountain in the village of Arenas, in the parih of Val de Soto. The former is found in ilate, and looks like wood; but when broke, the nodules difcover a white cruft, inclofing yellow amber, bright and tranfparent. Jet, and a fpecies of kennel coal, abounding with marcafites, univerfally accompany the amber. The natural hirtory of this curious fubflance is fo little underfood, that every fact relating to it thould be treafured up. Till of late years, it was found only on the fea-hhore, caft up by the waves; but even then the various infects inclofed in it, fuch as ants and flies, proved it to be a production of the land. But now we find it foffil, and hence trace a connedion between bitumens and refins. We fee it likewife as one link in a vaft chain, the origin of which all philofophers are labouring to difcover. We find it in a country, where the inclofing ftrata, and all the furrounding rocks, charged with matine fhells and plants, fhew clearly, that both it and they are the depofit of the ocean.-This fubject will be frequently refumed, and, from its vaft importance, merits the mof minute attention.

When every one began to talk of winter, I thought it expedient to prepare for my return towards the fouth, before the mountains hould be covered by the fnow, which ufually falls at the beginning of November, and fometimes even in the middle of October. I was not indeed in a condition to undertake the journey; but the fear of being fhut up in the Afturias, till the return of fpring, prevailed over all other confiderations, and made me refolve to venture.

As the account of my indifpofition may ferve towards the natural hiftory of the country, I thall briefly give it. Thè 21 it of Augut, riding from Oviedo to Aviles, on a rainy day, I was wet through; and at the end of our journey, as I had nothing at hand to change, I fuffered my clothes to dry upon my back. I had, however, no reafon to think that I had taken cold, till I perceived that I was gradually lofing the ufe of all my limbs, without either pain or fever. The phyfician, at the end of one month, confined me to my bed, and forbade me the ufe of wine, allowing me only water and vegetables, till he had reduced me to the loweft fate of debility. I fubmitted; but, feeling evidently that I was going faft from bad to worfe, I took my leave of him, and, by the ufe of the bark, with a generous diet, I regained fome degree of ftrength, and, getting myfelf placed upon a mule, I ventured to fetf forwards on my way towards the fouth.

The bifhop and his family expreffed their concern at my departure; yet, confidering the humidity of their climate, and the near approach of winter, they were kind enough to confent that I houid undertake the journey, in hope that a warmer and a drier air mighe reftore my health.

FROM THE

ASTURIAS то The ESCURIAL。

OCTOBER 2, I left Oviedo, and paffing through feveral little villages, came to Mieres in the middle of the day. At night I found a comfortable bed at Compomanes, having travelled ten leagues and an half over delightful hills, all either covered thick with wood, or highly cultivated.

In both thefe places I was much furprifed at the moderation of their charges. At Mieres, for a difh of eggs, for drefling my fowl, and for the ruido de la cafa, that is, for the noife of the houfe, or rather for attendance, the good woman required only a real, or fomething more than two pence farthing. At Campomanes, for the fame and for my bed, the demand was two reales.

[ 60 ]

As we approached the confines of the principality, the fcene greatly changed; for, inttead of foft and fwelling hills, covered with grafs or clothed with woods; fcarcely any thing was to be feen but fupendous rocks of limeftone, fome in long ridges rifing. perpendicular to the height of two or three hundred feet, others cragged and broken into a thoufand forms. In this route, the way winds chiefly by the fide of little rivers, brooks, or torrents, till it has paffed the fummit of that vaft chain of mountains, which feparates the Aturias from the Old Cantille: yet in the midft of thefe fupendous mountains, a few rich vallies intervene, each with its little village, in fize proportioned to the extent of land fufceptible of cultivation.

In the ravins through which we pafed, I obferved that all the mills have horizontal water wheels. Thefe grind the cornvery flowly, being fed by fingle grains; but then to compenfate for this defect, they place many near together, and the fame little fream having communicated motion to one wheel, paffes in fucceffion to the reft. Thefe are well fuised to a country abounding abounding with fone for building, where water runs with rapidity down a feep defcent, and where difpatch is not required.

October 4, as we defcended towards Leon, we overtook a Merino flock, belonging to the monaftery of Guadalupe, in Eftramadura. Thefe monks have fufficient land near home to keep their flock during the winter months; but in the fummer, when their own mountains are fcorched, they fend their fheep into the north, where, having no lands, they are obliged to pay for patturage. They were on their return towards the fouth.

The great lords, and the religious houfes, to whom belong thefe trafbumantes, or tiravelling flocks, have peculiar privileges fecured to them by a feecial code, called laws of the Mefta; privileges, by many confidered as inconfiftent with the general good.

This inftitution has been traced back to the year $135^{\circ}$, when the plague, which ravaged Europe for feveral years, had defolated Spain, leaving only one-third of its former inhabitants to cultivate the foil.

[ 62 ]

But perhaps we ought to look for its origin in more remote and diftant ages, when the whole country was occupied by Thepherd nations, and when agriculture was but little known. Thefe certainly were the firft inhabitants, or if not the firft, at leaft, as the votaries of Pan, that venerable protector of the fleecy tribe, they may claim precedency before the more modern worthippers of Ceres. Occupying the hills with their numerous flocks and herds, it was natural for them in winter to quit a country then covered deep with fnow, and to feek the more temperate regions of the fouth; till thefe, burnt up by the returning fun, refufed them pafture, and drove them back again to the mountains of the north, which, during the fummer months, are covered with perpetual verdure by the gradual melting of the fnow.

The numbers of the Merino theep are continually varying. Cajaleruela, who wrote A. D. 1627 , complained that they were reduced from feven milions to two millions and an half. Uftariz reckoned in his time four millions; but now they are near five. The proprietors are numerous, fome having only three or four thoufand, while others have ten times that number. The Duke of Infantado has forty thoufand. Each proprietor has a mayoral or chief fhepherd; to whom he allows annually one hundred doblons, or $f_{0} .75$, and a horfe; and for every flock of two or three hundred fheep, a feparate fhepherd, who is paid according to his merit, from eight fhillings a month to thirty, befides two pounds of bread a day for himfelf, and as much for his dog, with the privilege of keeping a few goats on his own account.

The produce of wool is reckoned to be about five pounds from every ewe, and eight from the wethers; and to thear eight of the former, or five of the latter, is reckoned a good day's work. Some, indeed, allow twelve fheep to every fhearer; but even this comes fhort of what we do in England, where a common hand will difpatch fixty in a day; and a good workman has been known to finilh half as many more.

The wool of the Merino fheep is worth littie lefs than twelve pence a pound, whilf that of the fationary flocks fells for only fix pence; and every fheep is reckoned to yield a clear profit of ten pence to the proprietor; after all expences arē dicharged.

When the fheep are travelling, they may feed freely on all the waftes and commons; but, in paffing through a cultivated countiy, they muft be confined within their proper limits in a way, which is ninety varas wide. Hence it comes to pafs, that, in fuch inhofpitable diftricts, they are made to travel at the rate of fix or feven leagues a day; but where pafture is to be had, they are fuffered to move very flow. When they are to remove, either in the fpring or autumn, if the lord has no lands, where his focks are to be flationed, the chief fhepherd goes before, and engages agiftment, either of thofe proprietors who have more than fufficient for themfelves, or of the corporations, who, in Spain, have ufually extenfive waftes and commons round their cities.

It is to there claims of the Merino flock that fome political writers have attributed the want of cultivation in the, interior provinces of Spain.

On defeending once more into the plains of

of Old Caftille, an obfervation, confirmed by all with whom I had any communication on the fubject, occurred to me, that the wine on the fouth fide of the mountains, being tranfported to the north, improves greatly in its flavour, precifely as other wines improve by being removed to warmer climates.

At the end of three days, when I arrived at Leon, I was fo well fatisfied with the attention of my guide, that we made a frefh agreement, and he accompanied me to Sa lamanca. For himfelf, and for his mule, I was to allow him a hard dollar, or about four hillings a day, both in going and returning, he being to pay all his own expences on the road, which, for a ftranger, is the beft plan, although the natives find it more advantageous to maintain their guides.

Having fettled all preliminaries, and made provifion for the journey; on the 6th of October, we turned our backs on Leon; and, being by this time tolerably acquainted with each others dialect, we began a converfation by the way. The honeft fellow, taking a hearty fwig at the borracko, or leathern bottle, which contained our wine, broke broke the filence, by telling me, that this was the flin of his moft favourite cat; and then, continuing his difcourfe, gave me the hiftory, both of the cat and of the countries through which he had travelled with her ${ }_{\text {: }}$ fpoil.-This was to him, in all his journeys, a conftant companion, a never-failing fource ${ }_{r}$ of confolation ; and he appeared to be as fond of her now deád, as it was poffible for him to have been, whilf fhe was fenfible of his careffes. The fikin contained about a gallon, and ufually ferved us, when filled, for more than half a day
The way was over an extenfive plain of fand and gravel, evicently brought from diftant hills, all fmooth, and rounded by the action of water. The crops are chieny rye, with fome wheat and barley. The trees are the ilex, the poplar, and the elm.

I was fruck with the confruction of thei: ploughs, not merely as having neither theet, coulter, mould-board, fin (for to this defect I was become familiar), but as having the fhare morticed into the curved beam at leaf three inches above its heel, creating thereby a degree of friction, which muft greatly increare the labour of the oxen.

Women hold the plough. The cart-wheels are of plank, fixed upon the axis, like thofe in the Afturias, only they are better made.

The numerous villages contain from fifty to five or fix hundred mud-wall cottages, but feem in general to be going to decay. The inns are more wretched than thofe of the Afturias, and are thought to be confiderable, if they make up more than one bed.

At Toral, where we flept the firf night from Leon, as foon as we arrived, I furveyed the premifes, and made out my inventory of the furniture; finding in the chamber (for they had only one) two beds, two broken benches, one crippled table, and a little lamp dripping its oil, and fmoking in the middle of the room. This circumftance is not uncommon, becaufe they have no candles, and their lamps are of the moft rude conftruction. I was, however, too much of a traveller to feel difguf, and was preparing to fette myfelf comfortably, when an old canon of Oviedo, with two fchool-boys, and a young friar, entering, told me, that they had befpoken this room. Some days before. I bowed fubmiffion, but Fz ftopped ftopped one moment to enquire the age of this young friar. He informed me, that he was now in his feventeenth year; and that, two years before, at Aviles, in the Afturias, having accomplifhed his noviciate, he had bound himfelf by the irrevocable vows.

When I had retired, my faithful guide - informed me, that he had procured a bed for me at the houfe of the curate, who was a friend of his, whither he inftantly conducted me. Here I met with fuch a reception, that I had no reafon to lament my difappointment at the pofada.

The next morning we arrived at Benavente, and in the way had occafion to obferve a change of drefs. In this refpect, every province has fomething peculiar to itfelf. The peafants, who attracted my attention, were from Aftorga. They had round hats, leather jackets without fleeves, and trowfers fomewhat refembling thofe of Dutchmen, perfectly correfponding with what were formerly worn by the Brachati.

Benavente is at prefent remarkable only for the palace of the dutchefs, a vaft and chapelefs pile, poffeffing the marks of great antiquity, antiquity, and commanding a moft extenfive property. This city feems to be going to decay, yet includes fix convents. It is divided into nine parifhes, and reckons two thoufand two hundred and thirty-four fouls.

Bread is here three quarts, or $\frac{27}{3^{2}}$ penny a pound of fixteen ounces; beef is feven quarts, or a fmall fraction under two pence; and mutton is two pence farthing a pound. The beft wine is about five pence a gallon. There are the ftated prices, when beef and mutton are to be had ; but my guide having neglected to make proviiion for himfelf, muft have been contented to pick the bones of my miferable fowl, had it not been for the bounty of a traveller, who had more than he could eat.

The road from Leon to Zamora is about eighteen Spanifh leagues, all the way near the Efla, a little river whofe water runs into the Duero below Zamora. From this circumftance the way is moftly level; the foil, to a great depth, is either granite fand, or clay of a weak contexture; and the villages are compofed of mud-wall cottages.

[ 70 ]

meafure the room, which, "like moft in Spain, ferved the double purpofe of bedchamber and parlour, I found it to be twelve feet by ten; yet, in thefe contracted limits were contained, a bed, the treffels for another, a chair, a table, with two large cherts for the king's tobacco, for barley, linen, and all the treafures of the family. The kitchen is nearly of the fame dimenfions: yet in this poiada I counted thirty-five horfes, mules, and affes, with their riders and drivers, who all found lodging for the night.

Whilf I was at fupper, an old beggar entered. When I had given him bread, he kiffed it, bowed his head, and left the room. Struck with his behaviour, I followed him infantly, and gave him money; he bowed, kiffed it in filence, and left the inn.

Zamora, a city of great antiquity, is at prefent reduced very low, but formerly it muft have been confiderable, and will, I have no doubt, foon regain its confequence. Situated in a fertile country, on the confines of Portugal, watered by the Duero, and near the conflux of the Ena, is muf always have invited plenty; and when the communi.

[ 71 ]

communication fhall be opened by the canal, for the tranfport of its productions, it will daily grow in wealth. The extent of its fortifications, twenty-three parifh churches, and fixteen convents, inclofed within the walls, in fome meafure ferve to fhew what it was; and the recent decorations of the cathedral give a good fpecimen of what it may hereafter be. This building is old, but the altar is modern, and is much to be admired for the variety of its marbles, chiefly from the Afturias; for the elegance of its compofition; and for the beatity of its hangings, which are made of crimion velvet, richly embroidered with gold.

The chief manufactures are, of hats, ferges, coarfe cloth; and nitre; but for the latter the climate is by no means favourable.

Beef is cheaper than at Benavente, being here only fix quarts, or fomething more than three halfpence a pound; but pork is nearly three times as much.

From Zamora we travelled only three leagues, and refted for the night at Corrales, a village of three hundred and fixty cottages. It was not till next morning that I F 4 fully fully comprehended for what reafon we had made fo fhort a journey the preceding day; but, upon our entering an extenfive foreft, my provident conductor told me, that he always chofe to meet the morning, rather than to be overtaken by the night, whenever he was to pafs through a foreft, and that, by fuch precautions, he had frequently efcaped unmolefted, where others had been robbed.

From Corrales we afcended gently for three leagues, and then defcending as many, at the end of feven hours we reached Calzada de Valdeunciel, having travelled for at leaft five hours through a foreft, in which, as we proceeded, my guide told me the names of the eminences to be paffed, all diftinguifhed by one generic term Confeffonarios; implying, that on thefe the trayeller would ftand in need of a confeffor to prepare him for his fate. Confidering the vaft extent of this foreft, and its vicinity to Portugal, no fituation can be more fap vourable to robbers, or to the fmuggler who, when he has been plundered himfelf, is apt to plunder others.

pofed granite, with its quartz, feld fpat, and mica. The trees are chiefly ilex, roble, and the cork tree.

All the way from Leon to Salamanca, for three and thirty leagues, or about one hundred and fifty miles, the country is fo flat and open, that the Moorih horre, when they invaded Spain, muft have met with nothing to impede their progrefs; becaufe, in fuch extenfive plains, an oppreffed people, difpirited and difarmed, could have little inclination to make refiftance; and had it not been for a more hardy race inhabiting the mountains of the north, the whole peninfula might at this moment have been numbered among the followers of Mahomet.

When I directed my courfe towards Sa lamanca, it was with a view of paying a vifit, by appointment, to the marquis of Ovieco, but, unfortunately for me, on my arrival, I found that he was detained by illnefs at Madrid. This difappointment was the more yexatious, becaufe I had no letters, nor any profpect of being introduced. I ventured, however, to prefent myfelf to. Dre Curtis, prefident of the Irih college, who who received me with politenefs, took mer under his protection, and, during my ten days abode at Salamanca, confidered me as part of his family.

His fituation is refpectable, and the convent, part of which he occupies, is one of the beft in Spain. It was built A. D. I6I4, by the jefuits, but, upon their expulfion, being found much too extenfive for any one fociety, it was divided; the fouth fide being given to the Irifh, and the north to the bihop of the diocefe for his fudents.

The wing, in the occupation of the former, is three fories high, and more than two hundred feet long. In the middle of each, through the whole extent, there runs a wide gallery to form a communication between a double range of bed-rooms. Thefe long galleries having no light excepting at the ends, are well adapted to the climate: for even at noon, and during the mof diffolving heats of fummer, they afford a cool retreat. The whole building is covered with a terrace walk, commanding all the country; and here the young men take the air.

lege is nearly fimilar to this, with the addition of a cloifter, and an elegant apartment of fixty feet by thirty, defigned for conference and difputations.

The church is in common to both eftablifhments, and is built upon fuch a plan as mut do credit to the tafte as well as to the wealch of the difgraced community.

In the Irif college, threefcore fudents are received at a time, and when thefe are fent back to Ireland, the fame number from thence are admitted, to be like them trained up for the miniftry. Their courfe of education requires eight years. They are expected to come well founded in the languages; and of the time aliotted to them in Spain, four years are given up to the fudy of philofophy, the remainder to divinity. The fyiter of philofophy includes logic, metaphyfics, mathematics, phyfics, and ethics. For thefe they read Jacquier; and for theology they follow P. Collet. They rife every morning at half paft four, and have no vacations.

The mode of giving lectures is perhaps peculiar to themfelves, but worthy to be followed in our univerfities. The fudents have queftions propofed for their difcuffion twice every day, and on thefe they are informed what books to read; then, fuppofing the fubjeet to admit of a difpute, it is carried on by two of them under the direction of a moderator, who gives affiftance when it is wanted, and guides them to the truth. Where this mode of proceeding is not admiffible, the tutors, inftead of giving formal lectures, employ themfelves in the examination of their pupils, and the bufinefs of inftruction is thus greatly expedited.

Dr. Curtis lives with his pupilis like a father with his children; and, although in a ftate of banifhment, feems happy in the difcharge of his important functions. It is, however, much to be lamented, that he and they fhould be reduced to the neceffity of feeking that protection in a foreign and diftant country, to which they are entitled in their own. This kind of perfecution is neither juft nor politic. It is certain that ignorance and bigotry have a ftrong connection. Would you overcome inveterate prejudices, and are you anxicas to banifh fuperfition? let in the light. Would you conciliate the affections affections of thofe who differ from you in their religious creed? no longer perfecute. Embrace them, and from enemies they will become your friends; let in, the light, and difference of opinion dies away. Catholics, in the more enlightened countries, are no longer papits; their whole fyttem is going to decay; and, without claiming more than common fagacity, we may venture to foretel, that in proportion as the limits of toleration fhall be extended, all that cannot bear the light will gradually vanifh, till the diftinction between catholics and proteftants thall ceafe.

To haften this event, the education of catholics in Ireland, for the purpofe of the miniftry, fhould not only be connived at, but chould meet with all poffible encouragement.

The univerfity of Salamanca was founded in the year 1200, by Alfonfo IX, king of Leon, and regulated by Alfonfo, furnamed the Wife, (A. D. 1254) under whofe protection flourihed the greateft aftronomers of Europe. This feminary foon rofe into importance, and became eminent in Europe by acquaintance with the Arabian authors, and, through them, with the Greek.

Its profeffors traniated Avicena; who took the lead in medicine, and Averroes, who had beftowed much time in fudying Ariftotle; but not fatisfied with copying from the Arabs, they laboured much themfelves, and became juftly famous in their day for their knowledge in jurifprudence, and for their progrefs in all the fciences then cultivated in Europe. The reverence of the firt profeffors of this univerfity for Arifotle and for Thomas Aquinas, continues to the prefent day. The court indeed has long. declared war againt them both, and repeatedly commanded that they fhould beabandioned; but, not having adopted fuch methods as are practicable, to fecure obedience, the old profeffors walk in the fane path in which their fathers walked before them.

We are not however to imagine that Salamanca produces no men of liberal ideas. Far be it from us to entertain fuch a thought; becaufe we know that even in the darkef ages, fome men of fcience were hid in convents, who, had they lived in more favourable times, would have diffuied light, and have been admired in the world. One fuch, and I doubt not there may be many, I met with in D. Jofeph Diaz, a father of the Au-

guftines; who, for leaming, good fenfe, and liberality of fentiment, would be an ornament to any country.

The ftudents were formerly reckoned about fixteen thoufand, but they are now much reduced; and, in 1785 , the number of matriculas was nineteen hundred and nine. In a curious edict of Charles V. for the regulation of mendicity, we find a claufe permitting fudents in the univerfities to beg: provided they have a licence from the rector: but in the prefent day they appear to be in a more refpectable condition, and few, if. any, take advantage of this privilege. & :

The library is fpacious, and tolerably well furnifhed with modern books; yet the bulk. is trafh, confifting principally of fcholaftic divinity.
Of all the public edifices, the cathedral is the moft worthy of attention. The foundation of this ancient fructure was laid A. D. I5I3, but it was not finihed till. 1734. It is three hundred and feventy-: eight feet long, one hundred and eighty-s one wide in the clear, one hundred and thirty high in the nave, and eighty in the ailes. The whole is beautiful, but the mont ftriking part of this church, and of many public buildings in this city, is the foulp-ture, which merits admiration, not only for the tafte therein difplayed, but for its excellent prefervation. Over the principal door is reprefented, in bold relief, the adoration of the fages; and over another, the public entrance of Chrift into Jerualem; all appearing as frefh and tharp as if they were but recently put up.

The church of the Dominicans comes little fhort of the cathedral in point of fculpture. It has a reprefentation of St. Stephen ftoned, with a crucifix above it, all as large as life, and not apparently injured by the weather. Indeed in both there edifices the carvings are in fome meafure protected, not from a driving rain, but from its perpendicular defcent, becaufe they fink back as much as the thicknefs of the wall will permit, which is at leaft fix feet, and are furrounded by mouldings projecting confiderably beyond the wall. The precaution, without doubt, was prudent ; yet I was not a little fruck when I obferved the ornaments of bafs-relief preferving their tharpeft angles, even when expofed to the full force of the deftructive elements. This circumftance may be readily accounted for, when we confider that the fone is a grit, which which when firt taken from the quarry, is foft; but, upon being expofed to the air, acquires hardnefs. Hence it is peculiarly valuable both to the architect and the foulptor ; and to thefe properties we may attribute the beautiful monuments of art which abound in Salamanca.

It would be tedious to defribe the convents and public feminaries of this once fa* mous city, yet, to pafs them all in flence, would be inexcufable. I therefore briety. mention fuch as are mof worthy of atention.

Among thefe may certainly be reckoned the old college. Here the quadrangle is fmall, yet elegant; and the cloiter, with its four and twenty cofumns, one of the prettieft in Salamanca: the apartments are commodious, and thofe of the regent are in a fuperior file.

The college of the archbifhop is built upon a larger fcale, more light and airy, and having four galleries of one hundred and thirty feet, with two and thirty columns fupported by as many, which form the cloifter, it may be called magnificent. The date of this building is 1550 .

Cuenca college is remarkable at prefent for its neatnefs and fimplicity; but the portico, when finifhed, will place it among the moft elegant buildings of this city.

The college of Oviedo, with the churches of the Auguffinos Calzados and of the Carmelitas Defcalzos, deferve attention.

Of all thefe colleges and convents, it were endlefs to enumerate the treafures and rich jewels defigned for the fervice of the altar. Whatever is mot valuable, the produce of Europe, Afia, Africa, and America, is here coilected; and the beft workmen, in every country, have exerted all their tafte and kkill, each in his feveral branch, to fhew the perfection of his art. The ornaments and dreffes of the priefts are both rich and beautiful; but the moft cofly piece of furniture, in moft convents, is the Cuftodia, that is, the depofitory of the hoft, or, according to the ideas of a catholic, the throne of the Moft High, when, upon folemn feftivals, he appears to command the adoration of mankind. It is not uncommon to expend fix thoufand ounces of fille ver upon one of thefe, befides gold and precious frones; yet, in moft of them, the work workmanfhip furpafies the value of the materials.

The great fquare, although laft mentioned, is not leant worthy of attention. I had almoft hourly occafion to pafs through it, and never faw it without pleafure. It is facious, regular, built upon arches, and furrounded with piazzas. Such a fquare would be admired even in London, or in Paris; but in a city like Salamanca, where all the freets are narrow, it gives peculiar expanfion to the lungs, when you find yourfelf at liberty to breathe, when light burfts upon you by furprife, and when fymmetry unites with greatnefs in all the objects by which you are encompaffed.

The portico is not more to be admired for its beauty in the day, than for the protection it affords by night; becaufe in this city they have an execrable cuftom, both offenfive to the nofriils, and defructive of good clothes, fimilar to that, for which the inhabitants of the Old Town in Edinburgh. have been defervedly reproached.

In the year 1030 , there was not a fingle convent in Salamanca; and in $I 4.80$, previous to the difcovery of America, they had only fix for men, and three for women; but now there are thirty-nine. In 1518 , they counted eleven thoufand virgins. At prefent the perfons under vows are happily reduced to one thoufand five hundred and nineteen.

The houfes are no more than three thoufand, yet they have twenty-feven parif churches, with fifteen chapels, and the elergy are, of thofe that are parochial, three hundred and ninety-nine; of the cathedral, one hundred thirty-two; befides the royal clergy of S. Mark, forty-nine; amounting in the whole to five hundred and eighty.

In a city where the convents and clergy are fo numerous, it may be well expected, that beggars will abound; and agreeably to this idea it is feen, that by the ample provifion here made for lazzinefs, every ftreet fwarms with vagabonds, not merely with thofe, who are proper objects of compaffion, but with wretches, who, if compelled to work, would be found abundantly able to maintain themfelves. There is indeed an hofpicio, or general work-houfe, for their reception; but as the funds are limited, and do not amount to fixteen hundred pounds a year, it can fupport only four hundred and fifty paupers. Should, however, the government be inclined to increafe there funds, it will make no great difference, becaufe the numbers both in the work-houfe and the ftreets will always bear proportion to the food difributed. This truth can fearcely be inculcated too often; but I thall defer my obfervations upon it, till I come to treat of Cadiz.

Among the various implements in this hofpicio, I was much pleafed with one for weaving tape, both cheap and fimple in its conftruction, and fo expeditious in its work, that a little child weaves near fifty yards, and a woman more than one hundred and twenty, in a day. I fhall defcribe it by the affiftance of a drawing. , , , , ,

I was much pleafed with the hufbandry in the vicinity of this city, as being fuited to the foil. The plough has neither coulter, fin, not mould-board; but near the tail of the fhare it has two pins, fo difpofed as to lay the furrow in high rafters or ridges, like the roof of a houfe. In this condition the land is left till feed time, when the ploughman fint fows the grain, then flits the furrow; and thus the feed, being all covered at an equal depth, fprings away together, and appears as if it had been drilled. This, in a light foil, is ceptainly much better than either to plough clean before the grain is put into the ground, or to fow it under furrow, according to the practice of fome Englifh farmers; yet I am inclined to think that the Hamprhire methọd of fowing upon ftale fallows, and letting in the reed by drags, would be found more profitable,

It is well known, that by this modern improvemente, the value of land has been more than doubled upon all the Hamphire hills. When they were accuftomed to plough often for their wheat, as in the low countries, and upon ftrong land, it has frequently happened, that after fowing four buifels to an acre, they have reaped only eight, and fometimes not more than half as much. But now, by fuffering the land to fettle, by fcattering their feed upon the ground, when the whole perhaps is covered with thiftles, and by paffing their heavy drags twice over the field, moving each time the length-way of the furrow, they make a faving on the quantity of feed, and more than double the produce they were accuftomed to receive: By improving on this practice, that is, by pufhing the principle fo far as to fold his fheep upon the land as faft as he had fown it, a judicious farmer, who lives at Cholterton in Wilthire, a few years fince reaped forty buhhels from an acre, on land which, with different management, would probably never have yielded back the feed he fowed.

When I exprefs myfelf fatisfied with the bufbandry in the neighbourhood of Salamanca, it is only fo far as it relates to ploughing; for, in no other refpect has it any claim to approbation. The ploughman and the grazier, inttead of being united in the fame perfon, are here eternally at variance; and as the latter is the beft tenant, the great proprietors give him the preference. Hence the country has been depopulated, and the lands, which are in tillage, for want of cattle to manure and tread them, produce light crops of corn. This bithopric formerly contained feven hundred and fortyeight corporation towns; but now it has only three hundred and thitty-three, the other four hundred and fifteen being deferted, and their arable lands reduced to pafture. To fuch an extent is the depopulation fpread, that, in a fpace of feven leagues in length, and five in breadth, which formerly contained one hundred and twentyfeven towns, each with its corregidor and councli, only thirteen remain, Thefe have forty-feven churches.

G 4 ploughing;

[ 88 .]

The foil, I have faid, is light. It is a fand, and evidently a decompofed granite, becaufe, upon examination, it is feen to be plentifully charged with a fine white mica. The rock is chiefly granite, covered in fome places

places with fchift, but in others with filicious grit, which, as it appears to me, is nothing but the fine fand or broken quarts. of the granite, united by a cement.

All men are fond of fyftem: they affemble facts, and are never happier, than when from thefe they can deduce fome general conclufion. The facts I wih to have recorded, are fuch as may trace out the origin of grit; and I am at prefent much inclined to think, that hereafter it will be given to the granite. The connection, as it relates to vicinity, fands confeffed, and may be fo far ufeful in making out the hiftory of that great revolution which once happened to our earth; but, from my own obfervations, I am ready to infer a more intimate connection, and that they fand related to each other as effect and caufe, or as the parent and his offspring.

I have already fuggefted this idea, and have ventured to draw one conclufion from it in refpect to Monjouy, near Barcelona. If well founded, this will affift us to account for the aftonifhing number of large grit ftones, or grey whethers, as they are called, on the Wiltfhire Downs, and will confirm the diluvian fyftem firf fuggeted by Mr. King, in the Philofophical Tranfactions of ${ }_{17} 67$. One of there large bowlder ftones of grit, contains fragments of white opaque, and likewife of tranfparent quartz, with two flint ftones of a confiderable fize. I muft, however, referve what I have to fay upon this fubject, till I come to the defcription of the Alps, on my return from Spain.

The government of the city is in a corregidor, one alcalde mayor, and forty-eight regidores.

When I had fatisfied my curiofity at Salamanca, and found my ferength fo far reflored that I could with fafety profecute my journey, I made an agreement with a Mozo del Camino, for himfelf and mule, to go with me to the Efcurial, not by the direct road, but by a fmall detcur, in order to fee, at Piedrahita, a famous country-feat built by the Duke of Alba. The next day, after dinner, October 22, I took leave of Dr. Curtis with a cordial regret at parting, and fet forward on my way, proceeding towards Alba.

For the firft two leagues we afcended gradually; then entered a foreft of ilex, which, as my guide informed me, ftretches eaft and weft near forty leagues. The acorns here are of the kind defcribed by Horace, as the origin of war among the rude inhabitants of an infant world, " glandens " atque cubilia propter." Not auftere, like thofe of the oak, or of the common ilex, but fweet and palatable, like the chefnut, they are food, not merely for the fwine, but for the peafants, and yield confiderable profit. Beyond the limits of this foreft, we began to defcend through a fine cultivated country, abounding with corn and wine; and at the diftance of four hort leagues from Salamanca, we reached Alba.

[ 91 ]

This city contains at prefent only three hundred houfes, and has feven convents. One of them, that of the Carmelites, merits attention for its pictures, and for its treafures; but the greateft curiofity is the caftle, with its round tower, fupported by four fquare ones, in which is depofited the armour of all the dukes of Alba. To this ancient edifice they have added, at fucceflive periods, more modern habitations, forming a confiderable quadrangle; but unforturpately all the rooms are fmall,

About three leagues from hence, we entered another vaft foreft of the ilex, where we faw many droves of fwine, a village with a church, confifting of four cottages, including the habitation of the curate. Here we took up our quarters in the middle of the day; and having left it, were proceeding towards Piedrahita, when a fall of heavy and inceffant rain compelled us to ftop fhort of it, and to have recourfe for fhelter to a miferable village called Malpartido. The pofada had only one bed for the uie of the whole family; and as that was occupied by a lad, fon to the good woman of the houfe, then dying of a putrid fever, we had a moft uncomfortable profpect for the night. Befides the bed-chamber, they had, as ufual, a kitchen, a room of about ten feet fquare, with an elevated hearth in the centre of it, over which a little opening in the roof afforded a vent for the fmoke. Around the hearth was a wide bench, which by day fupplied the place of chairs, and by night ferved the purpofe of a bed. Upon this they defigned to fcatter ftraw for me, leaving my guide to meaiure his length on the bare board at the other end of this magnificent apartment. Happily, however, I had a pafs from count Campomanes in my pocket. This I fent, with my humble duty to the alcalde, requefting that he would be pleafed to procure me a lodging for the night. In a few minutes the meffenger returned, and foon after the alcalde was ànnoùnced. I rofe up initantily, prepared to meet him with profound refpect; but, inftead of a haughty magittrate, fuch as my imagination had conceived him, behold a little infignificant man, humble in his appearance, dreffed in a coleto, or leathern jacket deftitute of fleeves, and bound clofe round him with a girdle of the fame materials. He informed me, that he had made all arrangements, and that the beft bed in the village was preparing for me. He had fcarcely finihed, when the young mans whofe place I was to occupy, entered to expoftulate; but the alcalde cut him hort with no bay remedio; and therefore, finding that it was to no purpofe to complain, he quitted poffeffion with a good grace, and took up his lodging in the houfe of fome relation. Having thus fecured a bed, I left my guide to take good care of the alcalde, as a token of gratitude for his attention, and retired to my quarters for the night.

[ 92 ].

In my new habitation I met with a comfortable bed, clean fheets, and a kind reception from the family; and when I was to quit them in the morning, they could not be prevailed upon to accept a recompenfe. I was much furprifed at finding fuch generous fentiments in a cottage; but I have fince had frequent opportunities of admiring the high fpirit of the Spaniards, and, in many inftances, their contempt for money.

The putrid fever was not confined to the pofada; it raged without reftraint; and, not only in this village, but in thofe of the vicinity, there was fcarcely a houfe from which they had not lately buried one of the family. It is much to be lamented, that the curates in Spain are not taught the management of fevers. As they muft attend the dying, to adminifter the facraments, it would be a deed of mercy well fuited to their character, and by no means inconfiftent with their facred functions, fhould they learn to prefcribe the medicines, which, in England, when properly applied, generally fucceed in checking the difeafe, and refcuing from death. This knowledge may be eafily acquired; and whenever it fhall be univerfally univerfally diffufed, fevers will ceafe to be fo deftructive as at prefent, and will be feared in many cafes no more than fire, which, well regulated, is not only fafe, but falutary; yet, if fuffered to fpread, is fatal to the houfe. It is not my intention to infinuate, that the two profeffions of phyfic and divinity fhould be united, but only that in every place there fhould be fome one at hand, who might endeavour to extinguifh this deftructive flame the moment it appears; and, confidering how fmall and thinly fcattered are the villages in Spain, and how wretched their inhabitants, the curate is the only perfon from whom they may naturally expect relief.

The country beyond Malpartido is exceedingly broken; and the granite rocks, expofing their rugged fronts without a covering, fhew clearly, that the fummit of this great chain of mountains is not remote. We had been afcending all the way from Salamanca; but having left the Tormes, as we draw nigh to Piedrahita, the waters take another courfe, and run into the Adaja.

Piedrabita is a village of one hundred and fifty houfes, with three convents and a beaterio, belonging to the dutchefs of Alba, and famous only on account of a country-feat erected here by the late duke, in imitation of the Engliif. Inftead of being built round a court, with a corridor, like the Spanifh houfes, it prefents a front of one hundred feet, with two projecting wings of fixty feet; and the ground floor, inftead of being abandoned to coach-houie and itables, is occupied by the kitchen, the offices, and the principal apartments; and over thefe, are bed-chambers for fervants. Contrary to the Spaniih cuftom, every room is ceiled, and the walls are papered. Altogether, it is a comfortable refidence ; but, to an Englifhman, it has no great pretemions. Had not the faireft part of its furniture been removed, it would have feemed more beautiful; for the dutchefs, who had been there with her friends for a few weeks during the greatef heats of fummer, was lately returned to court, and her prefence would have made a more humble habitation appear enchanting.

In leaving Piedrahita, we continued along the valley, fhut in between high mountains, all covered with the ilex and gumciftus. Thefe, mixed with the grey granite rocks, make make a beautiful appearance. As we ad. vanced, we overtook feveral Merino flocks returning to the fouth. Near the Cafas del Puerto, we entered another valley, running eaft and weft near ten leagues, and nevermuch more than a mile in breadth. At the end of it, flands Avila.

The foil is fand ; the plough is like that laft defcribed; the fields are divided into fmall portions; and the pafture is common. Their fheep are folded, and the fhepherd remains all night with his dogs near his flock, fheltered only by a ftraw cabin, juft large enough to ftretch himelf at length. They have no iron about their carts, either on the wheels or axle-tree; the whole is wood. The oxen are yoked in pairs, and draw heavy burdens by their horns. The drefs of the peafant is the coleto.

As foon as we arrived in Avila, I vifited the market, to make, as ufual, provifion for the day ; and having purchafed a kid, which, when the Merino flocks are paffing, fells for about ten reales, or two fhillings, I fent it to the cook's fhop, and then began my rambles. Whilf I was making fome inquiries, a gentleman accofted me, gave Vol. II. H me the informations I required, undertook himfelf to be my guide, and, before we parted, made me engage to dine with him. This was D. Baltafar Lezaeta, a prebendary of the cathedral; from whom I received as much attention as if I had been recommended by a friend.

Avila has at prefent only a thoufand houfes, or one-fixth part of its former population; yet the convents are not diminifhed, being fixteen in number, nine for men, feven for women. Befides thefe, it maintains eight parifh churches, a cathedral with forty cañons, five hofpitals, and a univerfity. No wonder, then, that it fhould fwarm, as it does, with futrdy beggars.

This city, built upon a granite rock, and inclofed by a wall, with eighty-eight projecting towers, has every where the appearance of great antiquity, but more efpecially in the cathedral.

In this are many things worthy of attention, but principally the cloifter, for its exquifite neathefs, and elegant fimplicity. The facrity is a good building, and the treafure contained in it, both in plate and jewels, would in England be called ineftimable. The cuftodia, as ufual, of folid filver, is four feet high, adorned with Ionic, Compofite, and Corinthian columns, and difplays much tafte both in its defign and execution. Among their jewels they have the pectoral of the late archbihop of Toledo, the infant don Luis, valuable chiefly for its gems, all large and of the fineft water. The choir has beautiful carvings. it

[ 99 ]

Of the convents, the moft remarkable are thofe of the Carmelites; one for nuns, the other for friars; the latter built upon the spot where S. Terefa was born, the former where fhe took the veil. In this, the principal thing at prefent worthy to be noticed, is a piture by Morales, reprefenting a dead Chrift in his mother's arms; of which, nothing need be faid after having named the . painter, becaufe all his works have fuch peculiar foftnefs and expreffion, that men have univerfally agreed in calling him, divine. The Carmelites of Avila once poffeffed a treafure infinitely more valuable to them, than ail the pictures ever painted by Morales : this was the body of S. Terefa. It was originally interred at Alba, A. D. $\mathrm{H}_{2}$. 1582 ,

1582, but thiree years afterwards it was fecretly taken up, and conveyed to Avila, where it was not fuffered long to reft; for the duke of Alba finding all other expedients vain, made application to the popé, and obtained an order for its return.

The life of S. Terefa, lately publifhed among thofe of other faints, by the Rev. A. Butler, is peculiarly. interefting. Her frame was naturally delicate, her imagination lively, and her mind, incapable of being fixed by trivial objects, turned with avidity to thofe, which religion offered, the moment they were prefented to her view. But unfortunately meeting with the writings of S. Jerom, fhe became enanoured of the monaftic life, and quitting the line, for which nature defigned her, fhe renounced the moft endearing ties, and bound herfelf by the irrevocable vow. Deep melancholy then feized on her, and increafed to fuch a degree, that for many days fhe lay both motionlefs and fenfelefs, like one who is in a trance. Her tender frame, thus fhaken, prepared her for extafies and vifions, fuch as it might appear invidious to repeat, were they not related by herfelf, and by her greateft admirers. She tells us, that in the fervour of her devotion, fhe not only became infenfible to every thing around her, but that her body was often lifted up from the earth, although the endeavoured to refift the motion; and bifhop Yepez relates in particular, that when fhe was going to receive the eucharift at Avila, fhe was raifed in a rapture higher than the grate, through which, as ufual in nunneries, it was prefented to her. She often heard the voice of God; when the was recovered from a trance; but fometimes the devil, by imitation, endeavoured to deceive her; yet the was always able to detect the fraud. She frequently faw S. Peter and S. Paul flanding on her left hand, whilf our Lord prefented himfelf before her eyes in fuch a manner, that it was impoffible for her to think it was the devil; yet, in obedience to the church, and by the advice of hes confeffor, the infulted the vifion, as the had been ufed to do the evil fpirits, by croffing herfelf, and making figns of fcorn. Once, when the held in her hand the crofs which was at the end of her beads, our Lord took it from her, and when he reftored it, fhe faw it compofed of fout large gems incomparably more precious than diamonds. Thefe had his five wounds engraved upon them after a moft curious manner; and he told her, that fhe fhould always fee that fame appearance: and fo the did; for from that time fhe no longer faw the matter, of which the crofs was made, but only thefe precious ftones, although no one faw them but herfelf. Whenever devils appeared to her in hideous forms, fhe foon made them keep their diftance, by fprinkling the ground with holy water. She had often the happinefs of feeing fouls freed from purgatory, and carried up to heaven; but fhe never faw more than three which efcaped the purifying flame, and thefe were F . Peter of Alcantara, F. Ivagnez, and a Carmelite friar.

It is acknowledged, that many of her friends, diftinguithed for their good fenfe and piety, after examination, were of opinion, that fhe was deluded by the devil; yet fuch was the complexion of the times, that the was at laft univerfally regarded as a faint. She had indeed every thing needful to conciliate the good opinion of her friends, and the admiration

admiration of the multitude. The gracefulnefs and dignity of her appearance, the foftnefs of her manners, and the lovelinefs of her difpofition, the quicknefs of her wit, the ftrength of her underftanding, and the fire of her imagination, all her natural accomplifhments receiving luftre from her exalted piety and zeal, from the fanctity of her life, and the feverity of her difcipline, all confpired to eftablifh her reputation, as one that had immediate intercourfe with heaven.

It is curious, yet mof humiliating, to fee a perfon of this defcription, amiable and refpectable as $S$. Terefa, deceived, and, with the beft intentions, deceiving others. In this inftance, we can readily account for the delufion from the delicacy and weaknefs of her frame, the ftrength of a difturbed imagination, and the prevalence of fuperfition. But when we fee men of the fineft underfandings, in perfect health, of different and diftant nations, in all ages, treading upon the fame inchanted ground, we can only wonder; for whe can give any rational account of the aberrations of our trafon? The hiftory of myficifm, if well $\mathrm{H}_{4}$. $\mathrm{written}_{3}$ written, would be highly interefting, as embracing fome of the fineft characters that were ever admired in the world. Should any able writer be engaged to undertake this work, he will explain to us the principles upon which Boffuet, that prodigy of learning, perfecuted Fenelon, the moft amiable of men, whilf $S$. Francis of Sales was the object of his adoration; and why he poured contempt upon Madame Guion, whill he had the nigheft reverence for $S$. Terefa.

This extraordinary woman, cherifhed by fovereign princes, univerfally admired whillt living, and worfhipped when dead, had the happinefs of leaving behind her fixteen nunneries, and fourteen convents of friars, founded by herfelf, and fubject to the order of Carmelites, which the had reformed.

Avila, although it no longer poffefles her remains, yet, as the place of her natiyity and chief refidence, is much reforted to at the feafon of her feftival. It has no manufactures. Some years fince they began making cloth, but the fituation not being favourable, the project was abandoned, and their dependence at prefent is on the produce of the foil. The country abounds with laffron, and this for a feafon finds employment for the women and the children. Were it not for the cathedral and the convents, the city would be deferted, becaufe not one proprietor of land refides here; the whole being either rented, or held in adminjifration, as they exprefs it; that is, cultivated by ftewards on the proprietors account.

No country can fuffer more than Spain for want of a rich tenantry ; and, perhaps, none in this refpect can rival England. We find univerfally that wealth produces wealth; but then, to produce it from the earch, a due proportion of it muft be in the pocket of the farmer. Many gentiemen among us, either for amufement, or with a view to gain, have given attention to agriculture, and have occupied much land; they have produced luxuriant crops, and have introduced good hubandry; but, I apprehend, few can boaft of having made much profit, and mof are ready to confefs that they have fuffered lofs. If, then, refiding on their own efates, with all their attention, they are confiderable lofers; how great would be the lois, if in diftant provinces vinces they employed only fewards, to plough, to fow, to fell, and to eat up all the produce of their lands? In France they are fo fenfible of this, that for want of wealthy farmers, the proprietor finds fock, and takes his proportion of the produce; but in Spain, excepting a few provinces, the lands are commonly in adminiftration: and hence, extenfive difricts yield only, a contemptible revenue to their lord.

From Avila we proceeded about a league through a rich valley, and then began to climb thofe mountains, which, dividing the two Caftilles, formed for many ages the ftrong barrier between the ChriPians and the Moors; till Ferdinand I. defcending with the united ferces of Caftille and Leon into the plain, drove the infidels before him, and difplayed his victorious banners in Guadalajara, Alcala, and Madrid.

1. On thefe high mountains we travelled near five leagues without feeing a human face, or habitation, and fcarcely a beaten track.

Ac a lower level we found the ilex. As we afcended, thefe were fucceeded by the roble oak; but near the fummit we faw only pines, with the juniperus europeus, the daphne mezereum, the matricaria fuavis, the genifta, and a variety of aromatic herbs, but chiefly thyme. At almoft every level, the ciftus tribes abound upon the granite mountains, excepting where, like thefe, the fummits are covered with an eternal fnow.

[ 107 ]

The firf little village we paffed through, is called Naval Peral; the next, at the diftance of a league, Navas del Marque's: this, although it has only fifty cottages, has a church, a chapel, and a convent. From hence we proceeded about three leagues, and then began defcending into the plains of New Caftille.

All the way from Salamanca I obferved faffron growing wild, which, if collected, would help to employ the poor in their villages, and yield confiderable profit. .as.

As we approached the Efcurial, we entered upon the king's hunting road, made like thofe of England, rather for ufe than beauty. Had the Spaniards been every where fatisfied with fuch; where they have finifhed one league, they might have completed twenty. Their ambition aims in every every thing at perfection, and by feeking too much, they often obtain too little. The idea they have formed to themfelves of a perfect road, in point of utility, is mof undoubtedly well founded; but in attempting to reduce this to practice, they are forced to lofe much time, and to expend more money than the benefit to be derived from it is worth. Had their ambition been lefs afpiing, ere now a communication would have been opened between all their great cities, and much of their produce, now loft, would have found a market. This hunting road fhould convince the theorifs among them, that a high-way may be firm without fide walls, and fupport any given weight without fuch a foundation of huge rocks as would be needfal for a caftie. And although, for the mere purpofe of expedition, to be perfectly both frrait and level would be defireable, yet the traveller is better pleafed where he finds variety, and is charmed, as he proceeds, with a conftant fucceffion of new profpects.

On my arrival at my journey's end, I found a letter from our miniter: Mr. Liton, to inform me, that when the court left S. Ildefonfo, where he had been for fome time expecting me, he had vifited Madrid, and that he fhould not come to the Efcurial till the beginning of the week, Having therefore fome time to fare for the excurfion, I immediately proceeded to repafs the mountains, not returning by the fame road, but going eaftward by Guadarrama, and croffing by the Puerto de Fuenfria, a pafs fo called from the coldnefs of its waters. This puerto is elevated, and the profpect from it is delightful; but with the fcorching fun, the afcent to it is fcarcely bearable. In looking down towards Segovia, the whole country appears level, like the furface of a lake, and extended like the ocean ; but, as we defcend into this plain, we fee the mountains rife before us. The country immediately around us, near this fummit, is majeftically wild, with deep ravins and projecting rocks, covered with pines, wherever pines can grow, and torn by raging torrents.

In a deep recefs, open and expofed only to the north wind, flands S. Ildefonfo, enjoying fremners, and gathering the fruits of

fpring, when all to the fouth of thefe high mountains, fainting with heat, are engaged in reaping, and collecting the autumnal crops. This change of climate, in the fpace of eight leagues, for that is the diftance from the Efcurial to S. IIdefonfo, induced Philip V. to build a palace here.
S. Hidefonfo occupies three fides of a fquare, the two wings of which being joined, each by a long range of buildings, defigned for' the king's retinue, and clofed in at bottom by iron gates and rails; the whole forms a beautiful and fpacious area, The principal front, of five handred and thirty feet in length, is to the fouth, looking to the garden, and through its whole extent the apartments communicate with all the doors on the fame line.
To give fome idea of the piciures, it may be fuffcient to name the mafters, whofe works have been here collected by Philip, and by fucceeding princes. The principal are Leonardo de Vinci, Michael Angelo, Raphael, Hannibal Caraci, Guercino, Guido, Carlo Maratti, Correggio, Rubens, Poufin, Paul Veronefe, Woverman, Teniets, Martin de Vos, Andrea del Sarto, Vandyke, Vandyke, Dominicini, Tintoret, Albert Durer, Jordano, Velafquez, Ribera, Ribalta, Valdez, Murillo, Mengs. In the church, the frefco paintings are by Bayeu, Mariano, and Maella.

In the lower apartments is a collection of antique ftatues, made by Chrifina, queen of Sweden, and confidered as ineftimable.

The church is dark, but elegant ; and, with refpect to treafures, has few to rival it in Spain. Among the vaft variety of gold and filver ornaments, the moft ftriking is one of the cuffodias, valued originally at feventy thouland ducats, or $£_{0} \cdot 7,6,60$. 8 s. 6 d. fterling. Wo the

The garden occupies a ridge, rifing to the fouth, and falling both to the eaft and to the weft. Near the palace it is laid out in the old tafte, with clipped hedges and ftraight walks, highly adorned and tefrethed with numerous fountains; but in proportion to the diftance, it becomes more wild, till it terminates in the uncultivated and pathlefs foreft, where the cragged rocks appearing among oaks and pines, prefent a ftriking contraft with the works of 2 r .

This garden, delightful for its walk $s_{\text {; }}$ which, although fhady, are neither damp nor gloomy, is moft to be admired for its fountains. Of thefe, the moft remarkable. are eight, dedicated to the principal heathen deities, and adorned each with its proper emblems. In one, Diana appears attended by her nymphs, who are hiding her from Acteon. In another is feen Latona with Apollo and Diana, furrounded by fix-ty-four jets of water. The moft furprifing is Fame feated on Pegafus, with a trumpet to her mouth, throwing up a fream of more than two inches in diameter to the height of one hundred and thisty-two feet. But the moft pleafing fight is the Plazuela de las. Ocho Cables, where eight walks unite, each with its fountain in the centre, and where eight other fountains, under lofty arches, fupported by Ionic pillars of white Italian marble, form an cctagon, adorned with the images of Saturn, Minerva, Vefta, Neptune, Ceres, Mars, Hercules, and Peace, ftanding round it; and Apollo, with Pandora, in the middle. The flatues are all of lead, varnifhed in imitation of brafs, and were made by Fermin and Tierri.

[ II3]

Befides fountains innumerable, here are vaft refervoirs and falls of water, fo difpofed as to contribute much to the beauty of the place.

When we confider, that the whole of the garden was a barren rock, that the foil is brought from a great diftance, and that water is conveyed to every tree; when we reflect upon the quantity of lead ufed for the images, and of caft iron for the pipes, with the expence of workmanfhip for both, we fhall not be furprifed to hear that this place coft forty-five millions of piaftres, or, in Englifh money, near fix millions and an half.

Nothing is more whimfical thian tafte; but, if it be true, that beauty is founded in utility; this place will always deferve to be admired. In the prefent day, it is not uncommon to build the manfion in the middle of a field, open and expofed to every wind, without fhelter, without a fence, and wholly unconnected with the garden. Near the habitation all is wild, and art, if any where, appears only at a diftance. In all this we can trace no utility, nor will fucceeding generations difcover beauty. On the contrary, in the garden of S. Ildefonfo, we find every thing, which in a fultry feaw fon is defirable; a free circulation of air, a deep fhade, and tefrefhing vapours to abforb the heat; whilft from its contiguity to the manfon, the accefs to it is eafy, and at any time thefe comforts may be inftantly enjoyed; yet, without thefe numerous fountains, the clipped hedges, and the narrow walks, the circulation would be lefs rapid, the fhade lefs deep, and the refrefhing vapour would be wanting.

The glafs manufacture is here carried to a degree of perfection unknown in England. The largeft mirrors are made in a brafs frame, one hundred and fixty - two inches long, ninety - three wide, and fix deep, weighing near nine tons. Thefe are defigned wholly for the royal palaces, and for prefents from the king, Yet, even for fuch purpofes, it is ill placed, and proves a devouring monfter in a country where provifions are dear, fewel fcarce, and carriage exceedingly expenfive.

Here is alfo a royal manufacture of linen, employing about fifteen looms; by which, as it is faid, the king is a confiderable lofer.

Being now within the diftance of two fhort leagues from Segovia, I could not return without paying a vifit to that intereft ing city. In the way to it, there is little appearance of cultivation, and the obvious reafon is the continual depredations occafioned by the royal deer. As we paffed through the woods, before we came into the open field, we faw vaft herds of them, unconfined, and free to range unmolefted over all the country.

In Segovia, the firt object to attract the eye, is the aqueduct. It contains one hundred and fifty-nine arches, extends about feven hundred and forty yards, and, where it croffes the valley, it is fomething more than ninety-four feet high.

The cathedral has no great pretenfions; yet in one of the chapels there is a good altar, with the Defcent from the Crofs well executed in mezzo relievo, by a difciple of Michael Angelo, and finifhed A.D. 1571 . The church is nearly upon the model of the great church at Salamanca, but it is not fo highly finifhed.

The Alcazar, or ancient palace of the Moors, has been fo often defrribed, that I fhould pafs it over in filence, did not the attentions I received there deferve a particular remembrance. I had no letters, and count Lacy, the infpector, was ablent; but, upon prefenting myfelf to his lieutenant, as a ftranger, he received me with politenefs, and conducted me to every apartment. This ftrong tower is no longer, as formerly, a flate prifon: it ferves a more honourable purpofe, and is devoted to one hundred cavaliers, who are here inftructed in the military fcience. The fight of this building gave me pleafure, more efpecially the great hall, with the images of all their monarchs; but the higheff fatisfaction was, to fee the Spanifh character ftrongly marked in the countenances of many among the young gentlemen who are educated here. A Spaniard may poffibly grow rich in trade; he may make a progrefs in the fciences; but, were he left to follow his natural inclination, he would certainly betake himfelf to a military life; and for that, if generofity, if patience and fortitude, if a fpirit of enterprize, are requifite, in all thefe the true Spaniard will excel.

Segovia was once famous for its cloth, made on the king's account ; but other nation have fince become rivals in this branch, and the manufacture in this city has been gradually declining. When the king gave it up to a private company, he left about three thoufand pounds in trade; but now he is no longer a partner in the bufinefs. In the year 1612 , were made here, twentyfive thoufand five hundred pieces of cloth, which confumed forty-four thoufand fix hundred and twenty-five quintals of wool, employed thirty-four thoufand one hundred and eighty-nine perfons; but at prefent they make only about four thoufand pieces. The principal imperfections of this cloth are, that the thread is not even, and that much greafe remains in it, when it is delivered to the dyer; in confequence of which, the colour is apt to fail. Yet independantly of imperfections, fo many are the difadvantages under which the manufacture labours, that foreigners can afford to pay three pounds for the arroba of fine wool, for which the Spaniard gives no more than twenty fhillings, and after all his charges can command the market even in the ports of Spain.

In the year $\overline{1} 525$, the city contained five thoufand families ; but now they do not furpafs two thoufand: a fcanty population this for twenty-five parifhes: yet, befides the twenty-five churches, together with the cathedral, they have one and twenty convents. When the canal is finifhed, and the communication opened to the Bay of Bifcay at $S$. Ander, the trade and manufactures of Segovia may revive; but, previous to that event, there can be nothing to infpire them with hope.

As we retuŗned (October 28, towards New Caftille, my intention was to have travelled at our leifure; but, obferving fome degree of impatience in my guide to repafs the mountains before night, I was happy to indulge him; and the next morning? when I lopked back and faw the lofty fummits covered deep with fnow, I comprehended the reafon of his folicitude. The ways behind us were rendered thas for the time impaffable, whillt all before us had been on ly watered by foft and refrefhing fhowers.

In the Old Caftille, the ufual price demanded by a muleteer is four reals a day for himfelf, as many for his mule, and fix for barley, altogether equal to $2 s .9 d$. ; but fhould you omit to make a bargain, you muft depend upon his mercy. The whole expence of travelling may be reckoned at ten thilings thillings a day, if you go ftraight forwards : but if you make a circle, or return with the fame mule, it comes to about 7 s. $6 d$.

$\therefore$ The convent of $S$. Lorenzo is feated in a deep recefs, at the foot of thofe high mountains, which feparate the two Caftilles; and, protected fromevery wind, except the foutheaft, it looks down upon a wide extended plain, with all the neighbouring hills covered by thick woods, whilft the mountains to the north are bare, or covered almoft perpetually with fnow. It was built by Philip II. in obedience to his father Charles $\overline{\text {. }}$. to accomplifh his vow made after the battle of S. Quintin, which he gained by the interceffion of S , Lorenzo. In honour of that faint, the architetct, Juan Butifta de Toledo, sook his idea from a gridiron, the inftrument on which he fuffered, making the royal refidence project by way of handle, and reprefenting, not only the bars by multiplied divifions, but the legs, by four high towers placed in the angles of this edifice. The dimenfions of the conyent are feven hundred and forty Spanifh feet by fiye hundred and eighty, and the height is fixty; but the dome of the church is three hundred and thirty. The whole was finifhed under the I. 4 infpection infpection of Juan de Herrera, who was pupil to Bautifa.

[ 120 ]

The friars of this convent are one hundred and fixty, and their annual revenue is five millions of reals, or about fifty thoufand pounds, arifing partly from land, and partly from their flock of thirty-fix thoufand Me rino fheep, befides one thoufand kept conftantly near home, for the confumption of the family.

- Their library confifts of thirty thoufand volumes, contained in two magnificent apartments, each, one hundred and ninety= four Spanifh, or fomething more than one hundred and eighty-two Englifh feet in length. In the lower room, are chiefly printed books; yet in it is depofited the fa= mous manufcript of the Four Gofpels, written in gold letters, a work of the eleventh century. Over thefe are collected four thoufand three hundred manufcripts, of which five hundred and fixty-feven are Greek, fixty-feven Hebrew, and one thoufand eight hundred Arabic, the latter well defcribed in a catalogue lately publifhed by Cafiri.

forty-eight ounces of filver, and forty-three of gold, befide rich gems.

To a connoiffeur in paintings, no place can afford higher entertainment than the convent of the Efcurial. In every part of it are feen the works of the bef mafters, and fome of their moft capital performances. It were endlefs to enumerate particulars. Suffice it to fay, that during the refidence of a month, I never failed a fingle day vifiting the convent, and never left it without regret ; always giving a more minute attention to the productions of thofe artifts who are the leaft known in England. I had peculiar pleafure in finding here, fo many monuments of Titian, who, during a refidence of five years in Spain, conftantly exercifed his pencil to enrich this nation, and to immortalize his name. The pittures which mof rivetted my attention, were the famous Supper of Chrift with the difciples, by Titian ; and a Holy Family, by Raphael; the latter once in the poffefion of our Charles, but fold by Cromwell, and purchafed by the Spanifh ambaffador, for two thoufand pounds : it is called La Perla. The beft of the pickures are collected in five principal apartments : in the facrity, a room of one hundred and eight by thirty-three ; in the iglefia vieja, which is one hundred and five by thirty-four; and in two halls of eighty by twenty, with their antichamber. Thefe laft are called Las Salas de los Capitulos, and, whill the court is here, are occupied by count Florida Blanca, on his public days. The great fair-cafe is beautiful, adorned with frefco paintings of the battle of St. Quintin, by Luca Jordano,

The pantheon, or catacomb, where the royal family, beginning with Chatles V. are buried, is a fubterranean vault of beautiful marble, highly finithed, capable of receiving twenty-fix bodies, each in its own recefs.

As for the treafures of the church, they are ineftimable. The image of S. Lorenzo alone contains four hundred and fifty pounds of filver, with eighteen pounds of gold; yet this bears a fmall proportion to the reft.

At a little diftance from the convent, the prince of Afturias, and one of his brothers, the infant Don Gabriel, have each a little box, fitted up with exquifite tafte, and hung with the beif pictures, to which they often retire with their friends. That of the prince is the moft elegant, and, as far as gan be warranted by one fpecimen, forms a happy * prefage for the arts, whenever he fhall mount the throne,

The Efcurial, as a refiderice, is far from pleafant. Were it low, and fheltered, like Aranjuez, it would be agreable in fpring; pr, were it elevated, hanging to the north, and covered by thick woods, like S: Illefonzo, it might be delightful as a retreat in fummer ; but expofed, as it is, to the full Atroke of the meridiar fun, and raifed up near to regions covered with eternal fnow, without fhelter, and defitute of made, it has no local charms at any feafon of the year. The minifters, foreign and domeftic, give good dinners, and do every thing they can fo make this folitude fupportable; but, as few ladies can be accommodated hefe, the affemblies want that gaiety which is pecuHar to the fex:

The king fpends moft of his time in thooting. In the middle of the day, after a fhort excurfion, he returns to dinner, converfes with the foreign minifters, retires for a few minutes with his confeffor, and, generally pefore three, fometimes much fooner, leaves the palace, and goes to the diflence of twenty or thity miles before he begins to hunt. When the light fails, he gets into his carriage, and returns. No weather deters him, becaufe he is not afraid of either thunder, lightning, hail, rain, or fnow, but when one cloak is wet, he puts on another; and as for his attendants, he tells them coolly, "Rain breaks no bones." No holidays detain him from his fport, except two in the paffion-wreek; and then, although he is naturally of a moft placid temper, he is faid to be fo crofs, that no one choofes to come near him. Even when one of his fons was thought to be at the point of death, he went out as ufual, always infifting that he would certainly recover; and when informed that his fon was dead, he replied, with his accuftomed calmnefs, "Well, then, fince " nothing can be done, we mint make the "beft of it." His ufual attendants are the prince of Afturias, the captain of the guard, his mafter of the horfe, his groom of the ftole, his phyfician, and his furgeon, All thefe occupy five carriages; befides which, there is one for medicines, guns, ammunition, dry clothes, &cc. Each carriage has fix mules; and as, upon the road, there are feveral relays for them and for the guards, the number required for daily ufe is about two hundred. Their rate of travelling is twelve miles miles an hour ; in confequence of which, accidents happen frequently to the men, and to the mules.

In hunting, the king does not depend altogether on his dogs: he has commonly about two hundred men employed to beat up the game, and drive it towards him at convenient places, where he and the prince are ready, with fervants attending to charge the guns, and to hand them forwards as faft as they are fired. No game comes amifs to him; but he is peculiarly flattered with the idea of delivering the country from wolves, of which he keeps an exact account ; and, when I was at the Efcurial, the number he hàd fhot was eight hundred and eighteen. Whenever one is heard of within a reafonable diftance, a multitude of people, from fixteen hundred to two thoufand, according to the extent of the mountain, are fent out to watch, furround, and drive it into fome fpot, where the king may have the beft chance for killing it. To thefe he gives fix reals cach; but if he kills the wolf, the watchmen have double pay. This expence, it mult be confeffed, is needlefs; becaufe a few peafants would often be fufficient, either to deftroy the enemy, or make him him quit the country; but where a good fovereign has pleafure in a purfuit, his fubjects will be the laft to think, that he can purchafe it too dearly. It were happy, however, for Spain, were this the whole expence; "but it certainly bears a fmall proportion to the fum total of what the nation lofes by the king's rage for hunting. All round the fitios, or royal manfions, the waftes are of vaft extent. I am informed; that the foreft of the Pardo is thirty leagues in circumference; and if to this be added, all the uncultivated land near Aranjuez, S. Ildefonfo, and the Efcurial ; if, moreover, we confider that the deer; being unconfined, range freely over the intermediate country, how high will be the eftimate! It is true, the king pays the fatmers to the utmoft for the damages they fuffer; but then, the injury fuftained by the community cannot be fo eafily compenfated, becaufe the country, wanting food, is depopulated, and the villages are gone to ruin.

I have been told by thofe, who are beft acquainted with the king, that in his youth he had acquired a tafte for letters, but being checked in that purfuit, he had given icope to the family propenfity, a propenfity not only now confirmed by inveterate habits, but encouraged in himfelf with a view to avoid entanglements. He is certainly a man of principle, and is univerfally allowed to be one of the moft virtuous men in his dominions; but this purity of morals he himielf attributes to his mind being contantly amufed, and not to his natural conflitution.

I prolonged my ftay at the Efcurial, chiefly for the purpofe of being prefent at the Batida, or royal hunt, of which there are four every year. This was ordered for the 28 th of November, previous to the departure of the court.

On the day appointed, Mr. Lifton had the goodnefs to place me with the Neapolitan ambaffador, who, as reprefenting one of the family, gave a fumptuous repaft upor the occafion; and in his carriage I proceeded to the fcene of action. It was an extenfive plain, with a rifing ground commanding it, and, at the diftance of about half a mile from this eminence, rofe a little wood, in which the king, with his three Sons, were hid, attended by their fervants.

For many days previous to this, two thout fand men had been difperfed in parties over the whole country to difturb the game, and to drive it towards the common centre, by patroling night and day, and conftartly, yet flowly, drawing nearer tơ each other. Soon after we had occupied our flation on a rifing ground, we began to fee the deer at a vaft diffince boundiding over the plain from every quarter, and making towards the fatal frot. As they approached, we heard, faintly at firft, then more diftincty; the found of guns, and faw the confufiori of the game, moving quick in all directions, but changing. their courfe at every inftant, as if uncertain where to look for fafety. When the fcouring. parties came firft in fight, they appeared to be feparated by intervals, and to confine the game merely by their fhouts and by the firing of their arms; but as they advanced upon the plain, they formed a wall, and as they drew nearer, they frengthened this by the doubling of their ranks, compelling thus the game to pafs in vaff droves before the royal markfmen. Then began the carnage ; and for more than a quarter of an hour the firing was incefiant. Some of the the deer, who had either more difcernment than the reft, or a better memory; who were actuated by ftronger fears, or, perhaps, by more exalted courage, abfolutely refuied to proceed, when they approached the ambufcade; and, making a quick turn, notwithftanding the chouts, the motions, and the firing of the guards, they leaped clean over their redoubled ranks, and efcaped into the woods.

When the firing ceafed, the carriages all advanced towards the wood, and the company alighted to pay their compliments, and to view the game. We found part of it fpread in two rows upon the field of battle, and the king, with his fons, furveying it. The game-keepers were returning loaded with fuch as had been mortally wounded, but had yet efcaped to a confiderable diftance; and, as faft as they arrived, they depofited the fpcil at the fovereign's feet. Having the curiofity to count the numbers, I found one hundred and forty-five deer, with one wild boar. Whilf thus engaged, I heard a murmer, and faw every one in motion. Directing my attention to the fpot to which all were preffing, Ifaw at a diftance a little company coming with a boar tied neck and heels together, and flung upon a pole. As they approached; the monarch and his fons, arming themfelves afrefh, drew up in a line, and ftanding at a convenient diftance, the burthen was depofited; the cords, one after another, were cut; and the poor crippled animal was allaying to move, when a well directed volley freed him from his fears.

The expence of that day's fport was reckoned at three hundred thoufand reals, or, in fterling, three thoufand pounds.

In the evening, the game, as ufual, was all depofited in the room where the king took his fupper, and there the family ambaffadors attended to pay their compliments. By family ambaffadors are underftood thofe of Naples, Portugal, and France, who having more free accefs, and being expected to pay more minute atention, think it incumbent upon them to exprefs their intereft in every thing, which gives him pleafure, and not only congratulate him upon theife great occafions, but every night, whilf he is at fuppers,

[ 13$]$

Supper, make inquiries, and afterwards inform their friends, what the king has killed.

Mr. Lifton, defirous of quitting the Efcurial previous to the departure of the court, ordered a Coche de Colleras to be ready the day after the Batida. This precaution is taken by the foreign minifers to fecure mules, becaufe, when the court is in motion, no lefs than twenty thoufand being required for their ufe, the whole country is laid under an arreft, and neither horfe nor mule can be obtained for any other purpofe.

In this little journey I was exceedingly diverted and furpiifed with the docility of the mules and the agility of their drivers. I had travelled all the way from Barcelona to Madrid in a Coche de Colleras, with feven mules, and both at that time, and on fubfequent occafions, had been ftruck with the quicknefs of underftanding in the mule, and of motion in the driver; but till this expedition, I had no idea to what extent it might be carried. The two coachmen fit upon the box, and, of the fix mules, none but the two neareft have reins to guide K 2 them:

them; the four leaders being perfectly at liberty, and governed only by the voice. Thus harneffed, they go upon the gallop. the whole way, and when they come to any hort turning, whether to the right or to the left, they inflantly obey the word, and move all together, bending to it like a fpring. As all muf undergo tuition, and require frequently fome correction; fhould any one refufe the collar, or not keep up exactly with the reft, whether it be, for example, Coronela or Capitana; the name proneunced with a degree of vehemence, rapidly in the three firfe fyllables and flowly in the laft, being fufficient to awaken attention, and to fecure obedience, the ears, are raifed; and the mule inftantly exerts her ftrength. But, hould there be any failure in obedience, one of the men fprings furicus from the box, quickly overtakes the offending mule, and thrafhes her without mercy; then, in the twinkling of an eye, leaps upon the box again, and calmly finiges the tale he had been telling his companion. In this journey I thought I had learnt the names of all the mules, yet one, which frequently occurred, created fome

[ 133 ]

Some confufion, becaufe I could not find, to which individual it belonged, nor could I difincily make out the name itfelf. It founded like Cagliophra, and led me to imagine that the animal was fo named after the famous impoftor Caglioftro, only fuiting the termination to the fex, becaufe the mules in harnefs are ufually females. In a fubfequent journey the whole difficulty vanihed, and my high eftimation of the mule, in point of fagacity, was confirmed. The word in queftion, when diftinclly fpoken, was aquella otra; that is, you other alfo; and then fuppofing Coronela and Capitana to be pairs, if the coachrman had been calling to the former by name, aquella otra became applicable to the latter, and was equally efficacious as the fmarteft ftroke of a long whip; but if he had been chiding Capitana, in that cafe, aquella otra acted as a ftimulus to Coronela, and produced in her the moft prompt obedience.

We did not leave the Efcurial till four in the afternoon, and at half after feven arrived at the duke of Berwick's, where we had been engaged to fpend the evening, having travelled feven leagues in about three hours and an half.

等EING thus returned to the capital of: 1) Spain, where I fpent the fubfequent winter, it may not be improper to give fome idea of the life a frranger leads here, with a few obfervations on the manners of the age.

Having been once introduced at court, you are at liberty to go as often as you pleafe. I availed myfelf frequently of this privilege $e_{2}$ both for the fake of viewing the paintings. at my leifure, and for converfation, becaufe. at court is the general rendezvous, where men of diftinction affemble every morning: to pay their compliments to the feveral branches of the royal family, whilf they are at dinner, and to talk of what is pafing: in the world.

the company retires; and, as the corps diplomatique is here remarkable for hofpitality, a perfon well recommended is never at a lofs for the moft genteel feciety at all hours of the day. Gratitude requires that I fhould exprefs my obligations, in this place, to thofe, not only of the foreign minifters, but others, who honoured me with their friendihip and protection. I fhall therefore take the liberty of defcribing briesly the kind of life I led whilf I was near the court.

Count Florida Blanea muft certainly claim the firf place in my remembrance; : for although at Madrid he gave no entertainments, yet in the fitios he had always the goodnefs to admit me into the number of his guefts, when he gave his weekly dinners. From our own minifter I every where experienced, not merely that general protection, which he gives to all, and thofe minute attentions, for which he is univerfally admired, but the kindnefs, hofpitality, and friendhip of a brother. His houfe was at all times open to me, and when he gave a dinner to his friends, I never was forgotten.

My invitation to the dukede la Vauguion's was both general and fpecial. Here the dinners were magnificent, the company numerous, and the converfation interefting; and here I dined more frequently, than at any other table in Madrid, attracted, however, neither by the magnificence of the entertainment, nor by the company which reforted to the houfe, fo much as by the eare and elegance of the duke and dutchefs, and the lovely fimplicity of their children.

With the American, Ruffian, and Pruffian minifters, I felt perfectly at home; and not much lefs fo with thofe of Genoa and Venice, The other foreign minifters often honoured me with invitations, and I was always happy in accepting them.

Whenever I wifhed to cultivate the fciences, or to converfe with men of letters, I frequented the more humble, but not lefs hofpitable, tables of fome native Spaniards, where I never failed to meet with a kind reception. With Izquierdo and Angulo, I increafed my knowledge in mineralogy; and on whatever fubject I was defirous of gaining information, I was fure to meet with fatisfaction, either from them or from their friends. Ortega has been already mentioned as a botanift; D. Fro. Bayer will always be remembered as a polite fcholar; and D. Juan Bautifta Muñoz will be celebrated as an hintorian, whenever he fhall favour the public with his work on the conqueft of America. Don Jofeph Clavijo deferves the higheft commendation, as a faithful and elegant tranflator, and as a man of general information. Befides thefe, I met with two brothers Fernandez, who have diftinguifhed themfelves in chemiftry, and the Abbé Guevara, who excels in his knowledge of Spanifh hiftory, and political œconomy. With all thefe gentlemen I was upon a moft friendly footing.

I dined frequently with the marquis Imperiali, a grandee of Spain, moft defervedly admired for the goodnefs of his heart, and the foftnefs of his manners; and once I had the honour to dine with the marquis de Ovieco, who is likewife a grandee.

This gentleman is pointed out as an example of an old Spaniard; and, if from one individual we might venture to form a general idea of a community, the politenefs. probity, probity, and true dignity, conficuous in his whole deportment, muft fill us with the highef reverence and efteem for the Spar: nif nation.

Like the French, the Spaniards drink their wine at dinner; but as foon as they: have finifhed their defert, and taken coffee, they retire to their couch.

When they rife from the fiefta, they get. into their carriages to parade up and down the parado, never going fafter than a walk. As they move flowly on in one direction, they look into the coaches, which are returning in the other, and bow to their acquaintance every time they pals. On fome high days I have counted four hundred coaches, and, on fuch occafions, it requires. more than two hours to proceed one mile.-

At the clofe of day, people fay the ufual prayers then wilh each other a good evening, and begin retiring to their houfes, where they take their refrefoo of chocolate, with bifcuits and a glafs of water.

When you are properly introduced into a Spanifh family, you are told at parting, "Now, Sir, you are mafter of this houre ;"

I39 ]

but the extent of the grant muft be judged of by your own natural fagacity ; becaufe, fuch is the politenefs of a Spaniard, that he makes ufe of this expreffion, when nothing more is meant than that you are at liberty to call upon him; accordingly you fee many retire before each meal, or drop in after it: but when it is taken in its full extent, the grant means dinnet, refrefco, fupper, any or all, whenever it may fuit you to partake of them.

Moft families, efpecially the great, have their tertulla, or evening fociety for cards and converfation, after which, they, who are upon a footing of intimacy, flay and partake of a little fupper. At thefe evening meetings you fee the fame faces from day to day. The fociety I chiefly frequented was at the dutcheifs of Berwick's; but I went often to the dutchefs de la Vauguion's, fometimes to the countefs del Carpios, and too feldom I vifited count Campomanes. Now and then, with a view to get an infight into the nature of fociety, I wandered away to other families, bụt not meeting any one, with whom I had been previoully acquainted, befides the lady of the family, I was foon weary, and could feldom prevail upon myfelf to prolong my ftay.

Without any difparagement to the reft, I may venture to fay, that the fociety at the dutchefs of Berwick's was the moft pleafing. It was frequented by the foreign minifters, and, not only were the dutchefs and her fifter, the princefs of Stolberg, moft engaging in their manners, but the eafe and freedom, which every one enjoyed, made the time paifs delightfully. The dutchefs herfelf, and three of her friends, occupied a whift table, fome feparated themfelves for converfation, and the princefs commonly, for a part of the evening, amufed herfelf with drawing, under the infpection and tuition of the Pruffian minifter, who, for tafte and execution, is one of the firft mafters in that line. Others were engaged at the piana forte. For my part, I commonly took up my pencil, and profited by the leffons given to the princefs. At eleven o'clock we fat down to an elegant fupper, and about one in the morning I retired, having nearly two miles to walk. The duke generally came home to fupper, but he feldom fat long before he retired to his bed.

At the dutchefs de la Vauguion's the fociety was chiefly French. The amufements were cards, tricktrac, and chefs, concluding with a fupper.

At the countefs del Carpio's all were Spaniards, excepting one Italian, and the amufement was fome game at cards. The evening clofed with a light fupper. The count was commonly at home before ten, and, except when at the play-houre, he fpent his evenings in his family. He is a fenfible man, and well informed; and the countefs muft give life to every fociety, where fhe is found. She is far from handfome; yet, from the fprightlinefs of her wit, and the foftnefs of her manners, fhe is highly interenting, and the more fo from her delicacy of conflitution, and the weaknefs of her health.

Count Campomanes gives no fuppers, and cards are feldom feen; but his converfation fills up the time, and renders all other fpecies of amufement needlefs. The fociety is chiefly from the Afturias, where he was born.

[ 142 ]

Befide thefe quiet tertullas, all through the winter the dutcheffes of Berwick and Vauguion gave balls once a week, and the counteffes of Cogulludo and Peñafiel gave concerts and balls, attended with fplendid fide-boarde of ices, cakes, and jellies. After the bail, every one retired to fupper with his own fociety.

When you pay a vifit to a lady, (for, wherever there is a lady in the family, the vifit is to her) you neither knock at the door, nor afk any queftions of the porter, but go fraight forwards to the room where fhe ufually receives her company, and there you feldom fail to find her, morning, noon, and night; in winter, fitting near the brafier, furrounded by her friends, unlefs when fhe is gone out to mafs. The friends are montly gentlemen, becaufe ladies feldom vifit in a familiar way; and, of the gentlemen thus affembled, one is commonly the Cortejo: I fay commonly, becaufe is is not univerally the cafe. During the whole of my reffidence in Spain, I never heard of jealoufy in a huiband, nor could I ever learn, for certain, that fuch a thing exifted; yet, in the conduct of many ladies, whether it

[ 143 ]

proceeds from the remains of delicacy, from a fenfe of propriety, or from fear, you may evidently fee caution, circumfpection, and referve, when their hufbands are in fight. Some have addrefs enough to keep the cortejo in concealment; and this, in Spain, is attended with no great difficulty, becaufe, when the ladies go to mafs, they are fo difguifed, as not to be eafly diftinguifhed. Their drefs upon that occafion is peculiar to the country. They all put on the bafquiña, or black filk petticoat, and the mantilla, which ferves the double purpofe of a cloak and veil, fo as completely, if required, to hide the face. Thus difguifed, they are at perfect liberty to go where they pleafe. But fhould they be attended by a fervant, he is to be gained, and therefore he becomes little or no reftraint. Befides this, every part of the houfe is fo acceffible by day, and the huiband is fo completely nobody at home, fo feldom vifible, or, if vifible, fo perfectly a franger to thofe, who vifit in his family, that the lover may eafily efcape unnoticed. This, however, will not always fatisfy the Spanifh ladies, who, being quick of fenfibility, and remarkable able for ftrong attachment, are miferable, when their cortejo is out of fight. He muft be prefent every moment in the day, whether in private or public, in health or ficknefs, and muft be every where invited to attend them. There have been recent examples of women, even of high fahion, who have fhut themfelves up for months, during the abfence of their cortejos; and this, not merely from difguft, but to avoid giving them offence. If the lady is at home, he is at her fide; when the walks out, fhe leans upon his arm; when the takes her feat at an affembly, an empty chair is always left for him; and if the joins in the country dances, it is commonly with him. As every lady dances two minuets at a ball, the firf is with her cortejo, the fecond with a ftranger; with the former, if fhe has any vivacity, fhe makes it vifible, and if he can move with grace, it then appears; but with the latter fhe evidently fhews, not indifference, but difguft; and feems to look upon her partner with dirdain.

As foon as any lady marries, fhe is teafed by numerous competitors for this diftinguifhed favour, till the is fixed in her choice; when

when the unfucceffful candidates either retire, or fubmit to become, in future, what may be called cortejos of the brafier, without any pretenfions beyond that of fitting round the embers to warm themfelves in winter.

It is reckoned difgraceful to be fickle; yet innumerable inftances are feen of ladies who often change their lovers. In this there is a natural progrefs; for it cannot be imagined, that women of fuperior underftandings, early in life diftinguifhed for delicacy of fentiment, for prudence, and for the elevation of their minds, hould hartily arrive at the extreme, where paffion triumphs, and where all regard to decency is loft. As for others, they foon finifh the career. It is, however, humiliating to fee fome who appear to have been defigned by nature to command the reverence of mankind, at laft degraded, and funk fo low in the opinion of the world, as to be never mentioned but with contempt. Thefe have changed fo often, and have been fo unfaithful to every engagement, that, univerfally defpifed, they end with having no cortejo.

[ 146 ]

I have obferved, that jealoufy is feldom, if ever, to be difcovered in a hufband; but this cannot be faid in favour of the new connection, becaufe both parties are tormented by fufpicion. This, it muft be confefied, is natural; for, as both are confcious that there is no other bond between them, but the precarious tie of mutual affection, each muft tremble at the approach of any one, who might interrupt their union. Hence they are conftantly engaged in watching each other's looks, and for want of confidence, renounce, in a great meafure, the charms of focial intercourfe. Even in public, they feem to think themfelves alone, abftracted and abforbed, attentive only to each other. He muft not take notice of any other lady; and if any gentleman would converfe with her; in a few minutes the appears confufed and filled with fear, that fhe may have given offence. In all probability fhe has; and fhould fhe be the firft dutchefs in the kingdom, and he only a noncommifioned officer in the army, the may be treated with perfonal indignity; and we have heard of ope who was dragged by the hair about the room. But if, inftead of giving, the fhould happen to have taken the offence, even the more delicate will fly likea tygrefs at his eyes, and beat him in the face till he is black and blue. It fometimes happens, that a lady becomes weary of her firft choice, her fancy has fixed upon fome new object, and the wifhes to change; but the former, whofe vanity is flattered by the connection, is not willing to diffolve it. In lower life, this moment gives occafion to many of thofe affaflinations, which abound in Spain; but, in the higher claffes, among 'whom the dagger is profcribed, the firft poffeffor, if a man of fpirit, maintains poffefion, and the lady dares not difcard him, left an equal combat hould prove fatal to the man of her affections. In this conteft the hufband is out of fight, and tells for nothing.

In a catholic country, with fuch-depravity of morals, it may be naturally inquired, what becomes of confcience, and where is difcipline? It is well known, that all are under obligation to confefs, at leal once a year, before they receive the eucharift: Every one is at liberty to choofe his cons $\mathrm{L}_{2} \because$ feffor feffor and prieft; but before he leaves the altar, he takes a certificate that he has been there, and this he delivers to the curate of his own parifh, under pain of excommunication, fhould he fail to do fo. When, therefore, a married woman appears, year after year, before her confeffor, to acknowledge that fhe has been, and fill continues to be, living in adultery, how can he grant her abfolution, or how can he be moderate in the penance he enjoins. Without penance, and unlefs the prieft is fatisfied that there is contrition, with full purpofe of amendment, there can be no abfolution; without abfolution, no participation of the eucharift; and, in the neglect of this, excommunication follows. Yet, from the univerfal prevalence of this offence, we may be certain, that there muft be fome way of evading the rigour of the law. Nothing is more eafy. As for the penance, it is impofed by thofe, who can have compaffion on the frailties of mankind, and is therefore fcarcely worthy to be mentioned. In many intances, it is ridiculous, Were any confeffor fevere, he would have few at his.confeffional. The abfolution is commonly a more ferious bufinefs; becaufe the penitent muft not only teflify contrition, but muft give fome token of amendment, by abftaining, at leaft for a feafon, from the commiffion of the crime, which is the fubjectmatter of confeffion. The firf abfolution may be eafily obtained; but when the offender comes, year after year, with the fame confeffion, if he will obtain abfolution, he muft change his confeffor; and this practice is not only difgraceful, but fometimes ineffectual. Here, then, it is needful to adopt fome new expedient. Two naturally prefent themfelves: for, either fome prieft, deftitute of principle, may be found, who, for certain confiderations, will furnih billets; or elfe, which is a prevailing practice at Madrid, the common proftitutes, confeffing and receiving the holy facrament in many churches, and collecting a multitude of biilets, either fell, or give them to their friends. I have certificates before me. As thefe carry neither name nor fignature, they are eafily transferred. They are fimply thus: Comulgò en la Iglefáa parraquial de San Martin de Madrid. An̄̆o de mil fetecientos ocbenta $y$ feis.

The principal cortejos in the great cities are the canons of the cathedrals; but where the military refide, they take their choice, and leave the refufe for the church. In the country villages, the monks bear rule; at leaft within their limits, and even in the cities, they fet up their pretenfions. As for the parochial clergy, one thing is certain, that many of them have families, and all are involved in the common cenfure. Even in the Afturias, my friend, the good bifhop auxiliary of Oviedo, a man of high principle, yet of great humanity, fevere only to himelf, but compafionate to others, made it a rule, that none of his curates houldhave children in their families. This facrifice, at leaft, he infifted they fhould make to decency. Beyond this he did not think it right to be too rigid in his enquiries. In thort, during my refidence in Spain, I never found one perfon inclined to vindicate the curates from the common charge ${ }_{3}$ but, at the fame time, all, with united voices, bore teftimony to the fuperior virtue of the bithops. Indeed, thefe venerable men, from all that I could hear, and from what I faw in the near approach, to which they graci-

oully admitted me, for purity, for piety, for zeal, can never be fufficiently admired ; but too few of the clergy, either fecular or regular, till they begin to look towards the mitre, feem to think it neceffary, that they fhould imitate thefe bright examples, or afpire after fuch high perfections.

This univerfal depravity of morals, if I am not much miftaken, may be traced up to the celibacy of the clergy. It is true, the example of the court, fince the acceffion of the prefent monarch, has given prevalence to practices which were before reftrained, and made that honourable, which had been attended with difgrace; but the effect muft always, in a meafure, have been coeval with its caufe. Nay, fhould we be inclined to blame, in the firft inftance, the Italians, who are faid to have brought this practice into Spain, we Gould be obliged at laft to trace it up to this minaken principle, that conjugal affection is inconffent with the due dijcharge of the minijlerial functions. In convering freely with the clergy on this fubject, I never met any one, befides the archbihop of Toledo, who attempted to vindicate this principle; and $\mathrm{L}_{4}$ where-wherever I was, I had no difficulty in declaring war againft it, becaufe they do not confider it as an article of faith. The principle is abfurd; yet upon it is founded the celibacy of the clergy, and from that, in my opinion, is derived the corruption of their morals. It has been common for proteftants, who trayel in a catholic country, to inveigh againf the clergy, and to laugh at the peopie, as prieft-ridden: fuch abufe is exceedingly illiberal. The priefts themfelves are to be pitied; but the law which binds them, the cruel law which requires, that they fhould offer violence to nature, or, more properly, the power which can abrogate that law, fould bear the blame.

The purpofe of the law is however fruftrated; for nature is like a rapid river, which, checked in its progrefs, fcorns reftraint, and, when diverted from its proper courfe, either overflows the country, or forms new channels for itfelf. What then is gained? The parochial clergy, and thefe are the only clergy who fhould be fuffered in a fate, have their connections and their children, but not as they ought, in the moft mof honourable way. They are-difgraced in the eyes of the people, who are taught by their example to live in the violation of the laws; and their children, for want of a proper education, are fitted only for the vileft employments in the community. How different is the picture, where marriage is allowed. The minifter is like the father of his parifh, and his wife performs the office of a mother ; both fet an example of virtue, and in every village teach the peafants how to value their domeftic comfort. In the ftreet, their children, commonly a numerous offspring, are diftinguimed by their look of health, by their cleanlineis, and by the decency of their condact; and, when fent out into the world, they form the moit valuable members of fociety.

Should the Spanifh government refolve to fet the clergy free; more ample provifion muft be made for their maintenance, becaufe at prefent it is farcely fufficient for their own fupport; and this might be eafily accomplified out of the vaft revenues of the bifhops, or by the fuppreffion of fome ufiefs convents.

The

The play-houfes in Madrid are not much fréquented: the genius of the people does not affimilate with this fort of amufement. This will evidently appear by the receipts at the two theatres; for, taking the average between them in December, they each produce fifty pounds a night, but fome nights lefs than twenty pounds; and, even in the Chriftmas week, not more than feventy-fix. They have lately introduced the opera, but with little profpect of fuccefs; becaufe mof of the genteel people keep to their own focieties, except when they attend the balls.

Few people here difcover any love for the fciences. The cabinet of natural hiftory is open to all the world, but it is not frequented; and although D. Anti. Fern. Solano, the royal profeffor of experimental philofophy, in point of clearnefs, elegance, and precition, may be reckoned among the firt in Europe, and delivers his lectures gratis, yet nobody attends him. Books are little read; all who are not engaged in bufinefs, are occupied in their attendance on the ladies, with whom nothing of this kind is heard of.

In confequence of proper introductions, I had an opportunity of feeing moft of the principal manions in Madrid. The firft, without exception, in point of magnificencé, is the duke of Alba's. The principal front is to the fouth, and is two hundred feet in length, with eighty-five windows. The eaftern and weftern fronts will be fix hundred feet when finifhed; yet in this vaft pile there is not one room fuitable to the rank and fortune of its lord. The upper frories will be occupied by four hundred bed-chambers, which are fcarcely fufficient for the family, confidering that all the fuperannuated fervants, with their wives and children, are to be lodged and penfioned there. The duke informed me, that he paid one hundred thoufand reals, that is, one thoufand pounds, a month, in wages only at Madrid.

For commodioufnefs and elegance, no houre in Madrid is equal to the duke of Berwick's. Built on a declivity, with the principal front towards the weft, it occupies, like other Spanifh houfes, the four fides of a fquare, yet is perfectly modern, both in fyle and furniture. You enter a fpacious hall, then, afcending a wifde flaircafe, you find a fuit of magnificent apartments, communicat $n g$ all round, and, upon the fame level with the garden to the fouth and to the eaff. From this circumftance, all the ground floor is kept exceedingly cool for a fummer's refidence, and the principal apartments are warm and comfortable in winter. Such an habitation would be ill fuited for the accommodation of numerous domeftics, with their widows and their children, defcending by tradition from his ancefors; and therefore the duke, very wifely, is fatisfed with giving them fmall penfions, and leaves them to provide a lodging for themfelves.

He was fo obliging as to let me fee his accomptant's offices, in which he has introduced arfyftem of ceconomy little known in Spain. They confint, as ufual, of four departments, but then in there he has only one accomptant general, with three clerks; one principal fecretary, with three under him ; one treafurer, and one keeper of archives, with an affitant. On all his eftates he has fimilar eftablifments, but upon a imaller fcale. His whole property prom

duces, grofs, one million eight hundred and eighty-eight thoufand fix hundred and eighty - three reals, and from this deducting three hundred and forty-one thoufand nine hundred and eight, for the charge of management, it netts one million five hundred and forty-fix thoufand feven hundred and feventy-five reals, or $f_{0} .15,467$ fterling.

The late duke of Arcos had more than three hundred people in his eftablifhment at Madrid. The marquis of Peñafiel, who is married to the young dutchefs of Benevente, and is at once duke of Offuna, of Arcos, of Vejar, of Candia, &cc. &c. with an income of about fifty thoufand pounds fterling, employed, when I was at Madrid, twenty - nine accomptants, including his two fecretaries, and I underfland that he has fince increafed their number; befides thefe, he has an advocate, and a family phyfician, for whom, with his principal fecretary and his treafurer, he keeps four carriages.

The duke of Medina Coli has thirty accomptants in Madrid, befides vaft eftablifhments on his eftates, more efpecially in Catalonia, moft of which belongs to him, and

and in the province of Andalufia, where he has extenfive property. His fon, the marquis de Cogolludo, who has a feparate eftablifhment, informed me, that he himfelf paid, only at Madrid, thirty thoufand reals a month, or near four thoufand pounds a year in fipends to his fervants.

It is dificult to efimate what, with good management, would be the revenue of thefe great lords. Such a property as the duke of Alba's, producing under adminifuation eighty thouland pounds a year; what would it not yield, if let out to fubftantial farmers? If, whilf they plough, and fow, and reap, and thrafh, and fell, and eat, and drink, upon the duke's account, he receives fuch an income; what would it be if every inch of land were made productive, and if that produce were expended with cconomy? With fuch vaft poffeffions, well managed, he might live in fplendor little inferior to the greateft fovereigns of Europe. But, inftead of this, devoured by their fervants, they are moft of them in debt; and, under the feeling of poverty, live exceedingly retired, fcarcely venturing venturing at any time to give a dinner to their friends.

In many of their houfes you find good pictures, collecied by their anceftors; but, as for the prefent generation, they feem to have little tafte for the polite arts: their time and attention appear to be loft in trifles. Among the houfes where the works of the beft mafters are to be feen, the principal are thofe of Alba, Medina Cœli, Santiago, Infantado, and Santeftevan. In the former is a very numerous and ineftimable collection; and, among them, the portrait of the prefent duke, by Mengs; and the great duke of Alba, by Titian; a Venus, by Velazquez; a Holy Family, by Raphael; and the famous School of Love, by Correggio. In this beautiful picture, Venus and • Mercury are teaching Cupid to read: it was fold in London, with other valuable pictures of Charles I. All thefe piçures were, when I faw them, crowded in the old manfion of the family, and therefore appeared to difadvantage; but, whenever they ihall be cleanéd and properly difpofed, this will be evidently a moft capital collection. All the other collections are in the highen prefervation, vation, except thofe of the late duke of Sant teftevan, now the property of his fon-in-law, the marquis of Cogolludo, which, although ineftimable, as being the works of the mof ancient artifts, are wholly neglected, and fuffered to decay. The marquis was fo polite as to attend me and the Pruffian minifter to fee them, and witneffed our lamentations over them.

During my winter's refidence at Madrid, I endeavoured to get fome infight into the revenue, and, I truft, it will be found that my labour was not in vain: yet, after all my enquiries, I.am inclined to think, that till fome great financier, like Mr. Necker, fhall arife in Spain, the confufion which reigns at prefent will continue to prevail in this department of the ftate.
L. Whilft the taxes were collected by farmers general, it was eafy to know the rent they paid; but now that all is in adminiAtration, to come exactly at the produce and expenditure will be attended with fome difficulty. Were the whole peninfula on the fame footing, were all purictual in their payments, and were the difburfements from one common treafury, this refearch would be expedited; but, as not one of thefe cirs cumitances exift, we muin take the materials as we find them, and do the beft we can. I fhall endeavour to give fome idea both of the revenue and its expenditure, founded on authentic documents, procured from the foreign minifters, and compared with an official paper, with which I was favoured from the treafury. But firf, it will be neceffary to point out the various articles which yield revenue, and to explain the terms relating to finance, briefly premifing fuch an hiftorical relation as can be collected from Spanifh writers on the fubject.

The principal refources of the crown for fupporting its dignity, were anciently found in the demefnes of the fovereign; but when, during a minority, or a difputed fucceffion, there had been plundered by the great nobility, he was obliged to folicit grants from the national affemblies. Thus it was with Alonzo II. who, after he had compelled fome of his barons to reftore the lands taken from himfelf and from his immediate predeceffor during their infancy, finding thefe unequal to his wants, in the year Vol. II.

1342, he obtained from the cortes, then affembled at Burgos, an alcavala, or tax upon all property transferred, to defray his expences at the fiege of Algeciras. Many cities had given him a fifth on the value of all commodities difpofed of by fale or barter, but when granted by the ftates, the tax was fixed at ten per cent. and made unir verfal over Caftille. Whilf Peter, furmamed, but perhaps improperly, the Cruel, driven from his kingdom, was a fugitive in France, Henry, his natural brother, having been proclaimed king (A. D. I36I.) the cortes granted the alcavala, without any limitation with refpect to time, as a mark of their Atrong attachment to the fovereign of their choice. But neither was this grant, nor the aid of France, fufficient to eftablinh the ufurper on the throne; for Peter, powerfully fupported by Edward, prince of Wales, at the head of thirty thoufand men, gave him battle, and compelled him to retire. When Peter had thus regained his fceptre, and began to meditate revenge againft the pope, Urban $V$. who had excommunicated him; his holinefs readily found means to appeare the indignation of the offended morarch, by granting him the royal thirds, or two-ninths of all the tythes collected in Caftille, under pretence of a croifade. Peter took the money, and increafed his army, but not with the leaf intention of frengthening himfelf againft the infidels. He had more formidable enemies at home, and to them he bent his whole attention; but in vain, for the prince of Wales having retired in difguft, his father, Edward III. was not inclined to continue his fupport. When, therefore, Henry appeared in the field once more, attended by moft of the principal nobility, Peter fell. This was in the year 1369.

At the commencement of the fucceeding century, Henry III. being obliged to affume the reigns of government, when he was aged fourteen, in order to prevent a civil war; on his acceffion to the throne he found his treafury exhautted, and whilt his great barons were rioting over the fpoils, which they had feized during his minority, he himfelf was reduced to the laft extremity of want. It is related of him, that returning one day from hunting, and alking M 2 for fomething to eat, his fteward told hims 'plainly, that he had neither money nor credit to procure a joint of meat; "Then," faid he, "take my cloak, and pawn it." He was not, however, fatisfied with venting his indignation in empty words; but, roured by hunger, he obliged his nobles to reftore the caftles, and to renounce the penfions, which the regent had been compelled to grant them.

$\therefore$ A.D. 1500 , when the wealth of America began to flow into Spain, the internal revenue of the country ceafed to be an object of attention, and the minifters of finance looked chiefly to the mines of Peru and Mexico for their fupplies. But before one century had elapfed, the phantom vanifhed: the treafury, exhaufted by inceffant wars, had contracted a load of debt, fuch as the country was unable to fupport; and, to pay the expences of the invincible armada, new taxes were invented, under the denomination of Millones, fo called, becaufe the grant was for eight millions of ducats. ( $£ .878,906$. $5^{\text {s.) }}$ To this the cortes, fome years after, added twenty-four millions, to be collected in fix years; of which, four and an half was impored on falt, the other nineteen and an half on wine, oil, vinegar, and butcher's meat.

The country was not in a condition to be taxed. Rich in mines, but poor in money ; exhaufted by continued wars in Italy, in Flanders, and by emigrations to America; wanting, at the fame time, every encouragement to induftry at home; wretchednefs fo univerfally prevailed, that Dr. Moncada, in the year 1660 , and Oforio, in 1686, reckoned more than three millions in Spain, who wore no fhirts, becaufe they could not afford to purchafe linen. Money was at that period lent commonly for twenty, and even thirty, per cent.; and if remitted to Italy or Flanders, the difcount was from fourteen to fifty per cent. being the difference of value between "vellon or copper, in which the taxes were received, and gold or filver, in which remittances were made; and this heavy difcount was independent of the exchange, which, as may be readily conceived, was very high. (Camp. E. P. Apend. 4. p. 274.) Such was the ftate of their finance in the reiga of Philip IV. His fucceffor, Charles II, M 3
who died at the end of the feventeenth century, was once reduced to fuch diftrefs, that, , as appears, by a letter to be feen in his own hand writing, he folicited money from the council of Caftille to pay the expences of his removal with his court to Aranjuez, where he was going for his health. The council anfwered, that, if upon examination, there was no other way to reftore his health, they would grant the money.

We may readily imagine that the receipts at the treafury were inconfiderable, when we caft our eye upon their accounts, and, fo late as 1714 , fee them wholly kept in maravedis, of which four are nearly equal to a farthing.

- At the beginning of the prefent century, Philip V. fucceeding to the crown of Spain, found only a revenue of ten million livres, or $£ .416,666$, and no money in the treafury; but, in the fuperior abilities of the prefident Orry, he had inexhauftible refources. This great man, who accompanied the young prince from France, and - became his minifter, raifed the revenue nearly to two millions fterling; and, at the end of an expenfive war, left the treafury not only free from debt, but with confiderable fums in bank. In the year 1714 he retired:

Previous to this period, the taxes were farmed, and the people were grievoully oppreffed, not merely by the farmers general and by their judges, but by others who rented under them. The poor peafants were robbed and plundered with impunity, their cottages were fold, and they were left to perifh, or when, unable to fatisfy thefe harpies, they took refuge in a convent, their neighbours were obliged to make up the deficiency. To remedy there abufes, the new monarch thought it expedient to reunite many of the leffer farms; and, to prevent the vexation of his fubjects, he recommended moderation to the farmers. His recommendation remained without effect. The farmers continued to nominate and to pay the judges, the judges continued to opprefs the people, and the people continued to utter their complaints. When, however, the new minifter who fucceeded Orry reflected that, whilf the taxes contipued to be farmed, the people muft be M. 4 fubject fubject to oppreffion, at his entrance into office, in the year 1714, he put the whole revenue in adminiftration; but, at the end of two years, he reluctantly confented to renew the farms.

After this fhort refpite, when the galling yoke was laid upon their necks again, and the farmers were once more armed with power to opprefs them, the people became impatient, and their clamours reached the throne; yet to little purpofe for a feafon, becaufe the neceffities of the ftate were pleaded, and whilf Philip lived, the evil complained of was only palliated, but not removed.
A. D. 1746, on the acceffion of Ferdinand VI. D. Martin de Loynaz undertook to plead with him the caufe of a much injured people, as D. Michael de Zavala had done with his father Philip, but with more effect; for his minifter, the marquis de la Enfenada, wholly abolifhed the farms; and from that period they have never been reftored. In confequence of this new regu-lation, the magiftrates of all the cities and diftricts in the twenty-two provinces of Caftille, adminifer the provincial rents, and remit the produce to Madrid, receiving fix per cent. for their trouble in collecting.

To reduce the fubject of taxation to a fyttem, we might divide and fubdivide, till our attention fhould be loft in claffes, orders, genera, fpecies, and varieties, but as this, in the prefent cafe, would not in the leaft contribute to clearnefs and precifion, I choofe rather to adopt an alphabetical arrangement.

Annats, called Medias Annatas, is a tax of half a year's revenue from the grandees and titular nobility on coming to their eftates, or fucceeding to any office. The marquis de Squilace was fond of this refource, and, fince his time, near one thonfand titles have been granted. From the clergy, the fovereigns of Spain received no annats, excepting only in America and in the conquered provinces, till the concordat, A. D. ${ }^{1753}$, between Lambertini and Ferdinand VI; but fince that time they are no longet fent to Rome. With thefe are included the ecclefiafical montbs, being onetwelfth of all benefices under three hundred ducats, or $£ .33$ nearly, and this rated according to the ancient valuation. Since there thefe grants, the pope, A.D. 1783 , gave in reverfion to the king one third of all fimple benefices, which are worth more than two hundred ducats per annum, to take place as faft as vacancies occur. For the remainder of the public revenue arifing from the church, fee alio excufado and effects of thè camara, with fubjady, from all which may be collected the increafing and almoft inexhautible refources of the crown.

Apofento, of Cafa de Apofento. When Philip V. fucceeded to the throne, his intention was to have made Seville the feat of his dominion; but the citizens of Madrid prevailed upon him to change this refolution, by offering him a fum of money, on condition that he fhould continue with them. This was afterwards changed for a rent-charge of one third on all the houfes, with liberty of redemption at twenty-five years purchafe.

Brandy is one of the royal monopolies. The king takes one-eighth of all the fpirits as a tax, the reft he claims a right to purchafe, paying for brandy twenty-two reals the arroba of twenty-eight pounds, and for Spirit of wine, twenty-eight reals; the former former he fells at fixty-four reals, the latter at one hundred. At this rate Madrid confumes ninety thoufand arrobas, or about five thoufand hogheads of brandy, befides eighteen thoufand arrobas of firit of wine. The cities agree upon a compofition for thefe duties. lunt wethe brames

[ 17 l ]

Cards are another of the royal monopolies.

Catalonia and Arragon. Under this article is comprehended the cataffro of Catalonia with the equivalent for Arragon, Valencia, and Majorca. zur w

Crufades. The bull of the crufades grants the fame-indulgences as were ufually difpenfed by the popes to thofe, who went to make a conqueft of the Holy Land, extending there in the firl infance to thofe, who fhould perfonally make war upon the infidels; in the fecond, to thofe who fhould fend a deputy; and, in the laft place, to fuch as hould aid, by liberal contributions, the foldiers engaged in this holy war.

The indulgences are, $x^{\circ}$, To eat fefh on faft-days, with the confent of their phyfician and confeffor, anc and, even without their confent, to take eggs and milk.

$2^{\circ}$, That for every day they faft voluntarily, and pray for union among chriftian princes, with victory againit the infidels, they fhall be excufed fifteen years and fifteen forty hours of penance impofed upon, or in any manner due from them; and moreover, fhall partake of all the prayers, alms, pilgrimages, even to Jerufalem, which fhall be performed by the churchmilitant, or by any of its members.
$3^{\circ}$, That, vifiting five altars, or five times one altar, and praying as above, they thall obtain plenary indulgences for themfelves, or for any of their departed friends, in whofe favour they fhall perform this.
$4^{\circ}$. That, once in life, and once at the time of their deceafe, they may obtain from their confeffor remiffion, even of thofe fins referved for the pope, excepting herefy, and of other fins, as often as they confefs.

dulgence as if they died under contrition.
60, That, vifiting five altars, and praying as above, on the days fpecified in the calendar, of which there are eleven, they may, by their prayers, for each day, deliver a foul from purgatory.
$7^{\circ}$, That, paying for two copies of the bull, a perfon may twice in one year enjoy $\cdots$ all the indulgences, favours, and priamat vileges mentioned above, and gain $\therefore$ double the benefit he might claim on having purchafed one.
For this bull the nobles pay about fix hillings and four pence, the commons about two chillings and two pence in Arragon, but fomething lefs in the kingdom of Cafille. Even the fervants purchafe thefe; and fuch is the demand, that they are reckoned to produce more than $£ 200,000$ per amnum. No confeffor will grant abfolution to any one, who has not this bull.

The effects of the camera arife from vacant benefices. By the concordat, A. D. 1753, the kings of Spain enjoy not only the nomination to ecclefiartical preferments, which formerly was in the popes, but they take the the benefit of vacancies, and feize the fpoils of the prelates, that is, their moveables, together with the effects of all clergymen dying inteftate. Thefe are called efpolios $y$ vacantes. The pope, indeed, names to fiftytwo benefices, but then he muft appoint Spaniards, who muft not pay cedulas bancatias, or fripulated fums, to the apoftolic fee, nor high intereft in lieu of a ftipulated fum. Count Campomanes ftates the efpolios y vacantes, at fix millions of reals per conum. V. Induftria Popular. p. 35 .

Excufado. In every parifh, the king choofes the beft farm, whether for olives, corn, or vines, of which he takes the tythes both in Caftille and Arragon. The clergy formerly agreed with him for this, Afterwards it was farmed by the gremios, or five united companies of Madrid, at twelve millions of reals; but, in the year ${ }_{177} 8$, the clergy had the grant at one third lefs. Moft of them accepted the offer; but they, who thought themfelves too poor to venture, refufed, and thefe farms are let to the gremios at four millions. The gremios have been accufed of having availed themfelves of this bargain, to purchafe corn in all the country villages, when it is cheap, to lodge it in their granaries, and then, felling it out again at a high price, to flarve the people, and enrich themfelves.

Extroordinary effects arife from feizures; from licenfes to export goods in the regiter fhips; and from the duty on the exportation of money. The amount is flated only at thirty-five millions; but fometimes it has been a hundred. This properly fhould go to the aduana, or cuftom-houfe.

Fines of the camera are levied by the council of Caftile on magiftrates tranfgref. fing.

The Indian revenue will be confidered by itfelf. It amounts, in America, to near four millions and an half fterling; but although varioufly ftated in the fubfequent fchedule as productive of revenue, it is doubted whether it yields a profit, or becomes a lofs to Spain.

Lances. This tax is paid in lieu of military fervice, and is, for dekes, counts, and marquiffes, two hundred ducats, or about f. 22 for each title; but a grandee pays eight thoufand reals. It is filled, Pecuniaris compenfatio pro baffatis militibus.

Lead is a royal monopoly, and muif be mof uncertain in its produce.

Manufactures of cloth and glafs are ftated as yielding a revenue. The glafs is made at S. Ildefonfo, and is chiefly for mirrors, becaufe the glafs for common ufe is imported into Spain. It is to be feared, that neither the glafs, nor yet the cloth, yield any profit to the nation. It is impoffible they fhould.

The mafferfbips of the three orders of Calatrava, Alcantara, and of S. Iago, were granted by the pope to Ferdinand and Ifabella, and fettled in perpetuity on the fovereigns of Spain by Adrian, to exprefs his gratitude to Charles for having raifed him to the papacy. As grand mater of there military orders, the king of Spain has the difpofal of nearly two hundred military fiefs, amounting in the whole to the yearly value of fifteen millions of reals, which may be confidered as part of the national revenue, although not carried to account. If thefe were properly improved and cultivated, they would be worth, as I am well informed, more than ten times as much.

The notaries, each pay two hundred du cats on his admifion.

The pajture of the mafterfhips arifes from extenfive meadows belonging to the three. great orders: and the pafture of the ferena is from a tract of country in Eftremadura, formerly confiderable; but from the frequent grants made by the crown to the great nobility, now fo far reduced as to yield only about five and twenty hundred pounds of our money; whereas, fo late as the yeak 1722, Uztariz ftates the value at more than two millions and an half of reals or about twenty-fix thoufand pounds per annum. . .

Pofts and Couriers. Thefe were formerly the private property of the counts d'Onate, grandees of:Spain, but they now form one of the moft valuable branches of revenue to the ftate. Mr. Wall eftablifhed a regular poft to America; but, before his time, the Spanifh ambaffador to the Englifh court was inftructed to procure, at London, information of all that was paffing in Spanifh America, and to tranfmit that information. to his court.

vate people, and on provifions, for the expence of their municipal government ; but the king now takes two per cent. on the produce, for general ufe.

General Rents are the duties levied in the fea-ports.

The Provincial Rents are, $\mathrm{r}^{\circ}$, the Alcavalas of ten per cent. on every thing fold or bartered, whether ufed in hufbandry or manufactures, to be paid every time the property is transferred; together with four per cent. laid on, at fubfequent periods, to the original tax. $2^{\circ}$, Millones, granted by the cortes, A. D. 160 r , for fix years, but ever fince collected, being eight maravedis, or about a halrpenny a pound for butchers meat and fuet fold in the market; and eight reals for every carcafe, whether brought to market, or killed for the ufe of private families. Under this grant, wine, vinegar, and oil, pay one-eighth on the price, eftimating wine at fixty-four maravedis the arroba, vinegar thirty-two, and oil at fifty. $3^{\circ}$, Fiel medidor, which is another duty on wine, vinegar, and oil, of four maravedis the arroba, granted, A. D. $642.4^{\circ}$, The royal thirds, or three ninths of the tithes, firf granted to the Spanifh monarchs, A. D. 1274 . $5^{\circ}$, The ordinary and extraordinary fervice, granted A. D. i 580 ; a tax on every thing belonging to thofe, who are not noble, that is, bidalgos, or knights.

Ecclefiaftics being free from the alcavala, the millones, and all municipal taxes, called arbitrios; they are refunded every year according to their confumption.

All thefe provincial rents, in the year 1778, produced one hundred and thirty millions of reals; yet, fo late as the year 1745 , they were farmed at ninety millions.

Rents of Madrid, called alfo Efectos y ffas de Madrid, and Rentas de arrendamiento, are the produce of the alcavala and millones of that city, and of five leagues round, farmed by the gremios.

Patrimonial rents arife from thirds, tithes, referved rents, and lands let to farm, in $\mathrm{Ca}-$ talonia, Arragon, Valencia, and Majorca.

Rent of the priory of S. Juan, or S. John, is mentioned only by Uztariz, becaufe it was afterwards granted to the infant Don Gabriel.

[ 180 ]

private property; but, in the year 1348, they were taken by Alonfo II; and, in 1564, Philip II. feized them as a part of his demefne. The chief of them are in Andalufia, Valencia, Catalonia, and Majorca. The falt-works of Mata, in the kingdom of Valencia, would eafily furnifh one million and an half fanegas, of about one hundred pounds weight, which, could they find a market, would, at twenty-two reals the fanega, make three hundred and thirty thoufand pounds fterling per annum ; but, by raifing the price, they have leffened the demand: fo that the whole amount of the kingdom is only about two thirds of what one work alone might furnifh.

Stamp-duties were introduced in $16_{37}$.
Subfidy is one per cent. granted by the pope to the kings of Spain, upon all ecclefiafical rents in their dominions, for the war againft the infidels.

Saltpetre, fulspur, and gun-powder, fealing wax, quickfilver, and tobacco, are all royal monopolies. Of the latter I thall fpeak more particularly, when I come to treat of Seville. It was granted by the cortes, Wool. In the year 1437, a tax was impofed on all wool in general, called Servicio $y$ montazgo; but, to encourage the production, this was changed by Ferdinand VI. into a duty on fine wool exported. The coarfe wool is kept at home:

In my fchedule, the Indian revenue is ftated by Uztariz at forty millions, and by count de Grepi, the imperial conful, at more than ten times as much. The former means the nett produce; the latter takes the grofs amount. Mr. Litton's average of ten years agrees nearly with Uztariz; but Mr. Carmichael, the American envoy, fates fixty millions. The fact, however, is, if we may believe thofe who are the beft informed, that the Spanifh colonies yield no direct revenue to the mother country. This being the cafe, I cannot conceive upon what authority, the Abbé Raynal ftates the clear revenue from America at thirty-four millions five hundred thoufand livres, or, in reals vellon, at one hundred thirty-eight millions clear, befides eighty-two millions three hundred thirty-feven thoufand eight hungdred reals paid for duties in Europe.

Count de Grepi ftates the revenue in America as follows:

In the preceding eftimate, the china manufacture at the Buen Retiro is made debtor only four hundred and thirty-fix thoufand one hundred and eighty - eight reals; but, from the extent of the concern, and from a more minute account received from Mr. Carmichael, I am inclined to think that one million has been inadvertently omitted: it would then fand one million four hundred and thirty-fix thoufand one hundred and eighty-eight reals. Befides this miftake, if it be one, the expence of the glafs manufacture is here overlooked, which Mr. Carmichael fates at one million one hundred and thirty-fix thoufand eight hundred and eighty-four; and the lofs by the cloth mannfactures, which is not flated. Yet, in the government returns, the manufactures of glafs and cloth are reported to yield, on the average of ten years, fix million two hundred and thirteen thoufand fix hundred and eightyfix reals profit.

From an attentive examination of all that I bave been able to collect, I am perfuaded that the revenue has not for many years been equal to the expenditure ; and whilft

[ 190.]

I was at Oviedo, in the year 1786 , the minifter of the finance, in his circular letter fent through all the provinces, urged the collectors to diligence and frict attention in the collection of the taxes, becaufe the expences of government were forty millions of reals more than the revenue. Since $I$ quitted Spain, the revenue is increafed, and from good authority I underfand, that the laft fatement of Mr . Eden is five hundred millions, or five millions Britifh, and that now they have a furplus of revenue to difcharge former debts.

The debts are of various kinds; fome ancient, others more recent. The former date their origin from the revolt of the Belgic provinces, A. D. 1566 ; and a conflik of more than three and forty years, during which, contracting a debt of two hundred million of dollars, Spain, without effect, attempted to reduce them, left fuch derangement in her finances, that the has ever fince been crippled in all her operations, when at any time the hath found herfelf engaged in wat. The country, exhaufted by this long continued conteft, cried univerfally for peace, and Philip III. A. D.

[ 19 I ]

A. D. 1600, although he would not acknowledge the fovereignty of the new republic, confented to a truce: but his fucceffor, having other views, provoked hoftilities, carried on a very expenfive war, and before he confented to the peace of Munfter, and to the independancy of the United Provinces, A. D. 1646 , difcovered that he had doubled the debt; which, therefore, amounted to about fixty millions of our money.

The principal creditors were the Genoefe, and other foreign merchants, to whom, as fecurity for payment of the principal with interef, government affigned certain portions of the revenue; which were denominated juros, becaufe they paffed like other property, either by defcent or transfer.

Thefe Genoefe, and other foreign merchants, being, after the expulfion of the Jews, the chief farmers of the revenue, and being at the fame time the principal creditors, are accufed of innumerable frauds againft the public, and this with both the connivance and participation of the clerks and comptrollers of the treafury. When their evil practices were brought to light, they they fold their juros to the natives, to the gremios, to the convents, and to the principal nobility; yet frauds continued, and thus adminiftered, the intereft of the debt fwallowed up the whole of the revenue.

In order, therefore, to redeem the juros; the tax called millones, or a fpecies of excife already fpoken of under the article of provincial rents, was granted by the cortes: yet the deficit continued. In confequence of this, many, whofe anceftors had purchafed juros, were happy to fell them at a lofs of ninety per cent. whillt the Genoefe and ftrangers, fill farmers of the revenue, being purchafers, paid them back for rent to government at par.

Thefe abufes did not efcape the notice of the writers, who were moft diftinguifhed for their abilities and zeal: but government paid no attention to this branch of political economy. Much falutary advice was given, although to litte purpore, and no ftep was taken to remedy this evil, till the dynafty was changed, and an heir of the houfe of Bourbon fucceeded to the throne.
This monarch, Philip V. reduced the intoreft,

At different periods confiderable debts have been difcharged, paying thofe proprietors who made the moft advantageous offers to the fate, and were willing to part with their intereft in the revenue on the loweft terms: but at the fame time the fum total of the debt, if we take into confideration the arrears of intereft, has been conftantly increafing.

To give a more diftinet idea of this incumbrance, I hhall, on the authority of Count Campomanes, fate the debt for which the millones or excife duties of $\mathrm{Ma}-$ drid have been given as fecurity, and from this inftance we may form fome judgment of the reft; obferving here, as I have done frequently already, that by dropping the two laft figures you convert the reals into pounds.

From this fatement it is vifible that fince the year 1685 , including arrears of intereft, this part of the public incumbrance, inftead of being leffened, is increafed nearly a hundred millions of reals, or one million feerling.

The fecond clafs of public debts are thofe contracted by the emperor Charles $V$. in his rafh wars. Thefe amounted, according to the abbé Raynal, to one thoufand million of livres tournois; which, at twentyfour livies to the pound, is $£ \cdot 4 \mathrm{~T}, 666,666$. But the intereft of this being then more than the whole revenue, the ftate, in the year i688, became bankrupt.

At the death of Charles II. and the acceffion of a new family, public credit was reftored; and, in lefs than half a century, Philip V. availing himfelf of this reviving confidence, contracted fiefh engagements, to the amount of near feven millions ferling. His fucceffor, Ferdinand VI. confulted the moft learned cafuifts in his empire upon this queftion, whether a fovereign is bound to pay the debts of the preceding monarch? This fimple queffion was folemnly determined in the negative. 0
It

[ 196.]

It being therefore fettled, that the kirg thould not difcharge thefe engagements, Ferdinand accumulated treafure, and left his coffers well replenifhed. Charles III. found, according to the abbé Raynal, one hundred and fixty million of livres in his treafure on his acceffion, and formed the pious reforution of paying all his father's debts; but when he had expended half this fum, he confumed the remaining part in fruitlefs wars. Like his predeceffors, to gain the good opinion of his fubjects, he remitted all the arrears due for taxes, from the feveral provinces and cities of his empire, which to many of them was no fimall favour, becaufe, excepting Galicia, moft of them are very tardy in their payments. $\because$ Thus matters frood, till the Spaniards entered into the lafe war for the emancipation of America; when, feeling diftrefs. for want of money, the minifter thought of trying how far he could avail himfelf of paper credit ; an expedient little fuited to the genius of a defpotic government, and leaft of all to one, which had never thewa regard to public faith. He began with iffuing nine million of dollars, in fifteen thou-fand notes of fix hundred dollats each, bears ing intereft at four per cent. Of this tranfaction I fhall have occafion to fpeak further, when I come to treat of the new bank, which has fo far reftored the credit of this paper, that, from being at twentyfour per cent. difcount, it now bears a premium.

Government avows the emintion of twen-ty-eight million feven hundred and ninetynine thoufand nine hundred dollars, at three feveral periods during the war; but pro-: feffes to have withdrawn one million two hundred thoufand; fo that, eftimating the dollar at three millings, the whole of this debt is $f_{0} .4,139,985$, and the annual intereft of this $£ .165,599$, a trifing incumbrance, when compared to the debts of France and England. The juros are not here to be carried to the account, becaufe. they are deducted out of the grofs. produce of the revenue, and the amount I have, ftated is only what it clears.

All good Spaniards have exclaimed againft, the operation of their taxes; and, in confequence of thefe expoftulations, as far as relates to foreign trade, government has fo $\mathrm{O}_{3}$ regulated regulated the cuftoms upon imports and exports, upon goods manufactured, and upon raw materials, as to encourage home productions; but then the alcavalas and millones operate fo powerfully againft thefe provifions, that the manufacturer cannot lift up his head, nor fand the competition with nations, who are bleffed with a wifer fy fiem of finance.

The alcavala, with its four cientos, beinga tax of fourteen per cent. on every thing that is fold or baftered, even for oxen and mulesufed in hubandry, for the raw materials ufed in manufactures, and for the commodity itfelf when fold, and this not once for all, butas often as the property is tranisferred, were this tax collected with rigour, it would create either a general fagnation or refiftance, and, perhaps, iome effectual remedy againt it.

The operation of the millones is not morê favourable to manufactures, This tax may be confidered as an addditional alcavala, under another name, confined wholly to provitons, and is colleted with fuch rigour, that even private families are obliged to pay eight feals, of $\mathrm{I} \delta .7^{*} d$ dor eyery § theep theep or pig killed upon their own eftate, and deftined for their own confumption.

When the marquis de la Enfenada, prime minifter to Ferdinand VI. turned his attention to this bufinefs, he faw clearly that Spain could never rife up into confideration under the preffure of fuch tazes, and therefore he conceived the idea of fubtituting in their place one contribution, to be fettled according to every man's ability, the whole amount being equivalent to the fum antecedently collected. For this purpofe he eftablifhed a commifion of thirty thoufand perfons, to make the proper inveftigations, and to carry his purpofe into execution. Before he could accomplifh this arduous undertaking, his mafter died; Charles III. fucceeded to the throne; and he was permitted to retire. His fucceffor, a man of fingular abilities, never loft fight of foexcellent a plan. This was the marquis of Squilace, who, having ferved with the king in Italy, as commiffary general, attended him to Spain, became his minifter, and, by his intrigues, foon contrived that every power in the fate fhould centre in himfelf. This extraordinary man has been accufed of rapacity; but, however that may be, certain it is, that Spain, had he continued in office, would have had abundant reafon to admire the wifdom of his government. To him the people of Madrid are indebted, not only for the cleanlinefs of its freets, but for their fafety from affaffins, becaufe he made them lay afide their capa and their flouched hats, by which both their perfons and their purpofes had been effectually concealed. This innovation, however excellent, this violence offered to deep rooted prejudices, excited indignation; and, being. accompanied by an accidental fcarcity of corn, taifed a form, which nothing but his difgrace was able to allay. The fovereign himfelf felt the fhocis upon his throne, and fled with his favourite, but was foon prevailed upon to return, and to fhew himfelf to his enraged people from the balcony, where the venerable count of Revillagigedo, viceroy of Mexico, on whofe word they could depend, affured them that the object of their refentment was difmiffed, and would never more return. The form fubfided; Squilace retired to Italy; and thus, in one moment of popular frenzy, all his well digefted plans for the reformation of the finance, the encouragement of manufactures, and the renovation of the empire, were rendered ineffectual, and vanifhed with himfelf. &

The commiffioners who were appointed to take the value of all the land, induftry, and commerce of the twenty-two provinces coniprehended in the kingdom of Caftille, after having made a deduction of one-third for accidents, eftimated the remainder at two thoufand one hundred and fifty-two millions one hundred and fiftyfeven thoufand three hundred and fixtyfour reals vellon, or a little more than one and twenty millions and an half fterling. Then having calculated the average of the provincial rents at one hundred and thirtynine millions reals vellon, or for $1,390,000$; to raife an equivalent for this fum, it was found neceflary to impofe $6^{\frac{15}{34}}$ per cent. on lands, houfes, induftry, and commerce, including phyficians, comedians, muficians, fervants, labourers, and artifts, not excepting the clergy, who are ftated as poffefing two-fifths of all the cultivated land. For this purpofe an editt was publifhed in the year iz70; but unfortunately, like fome others, it remained without effect. One provifion in this edict fhewed the wifdom of the head that formed it; for it was ordained that fertile land, although uncultivated, hould pay the tax. Tmanter set

We have feen, that the paper money iffued by government was depreciated to twenty-four per cent. when M. Cabarrus, by the infitution of a national bank, refrored the public credit, and faved the country. This gentleman is diftinguined for fingular abilities, for a clear head, and for a ready elocution. I have related, on what occafion I had firft the happinefs of meeting him. He did me then the honour to take notice of me, and ever after admitted me when he had leifure to entertain his friends.

The bank of S. Carlos is too fingular in its hifory to be paffed by in filence. It met with rough ufage in its beginning, but the indefatigable application of the projector, fupported by the good fenfe of count Florida Blanca, overcame all dificulties, and eftablifhed it on a firm foundasion, if we may call that firm, which the breath breath of a weak monarch, or one flroke of the pen of a wicked minifter, can overthrow. At the firft inftitution of the bank, it confifted of one hundred and fifty thoufand fhares, at two thoufand reals each, conflituting a capital of three millions fterling, with liberty to add annually three thoufand fhates, for thirty years, in order that there might not be one citizen of the Spanif empire excluded from this bene-

To create a confidence in the public, the directors were not to enter into any fpeculation, except were the king fhould give them a commiffion, for foreign and diftant commerce, or to favour the agriculture and manufactures of the kingdom; and to remove all occafion of jealoufy, the bank was to have no excluffive privilege, nor any monopoly; they were to receive at par, and thereby to procure circulation for the government paper, even at a time when it was from twenty to twenty-four per cent. difcount.

By way of recompence, or, as it was called, equivalency, they were to make all contracts for the feeding and clothing of ? ber the army, and for the fupply of the navy, receiving ten per cent. commiffion for their trouble, and four per cent. per annum for all the money they fhould advance. This grant was for twenty years. Befide this, they were to have the extraction, or the exclufive privilege of exporting fpecie, collecting from the merchant four per cent. for the ufe of government, and three for the bank. They were to have one per cent. on all remittances from the court of Ma drid to its minifters in foreign parts, and four per cent. for difcounting bills. No entail was to be valid againft the demands of the bank.

Notwithfanding fuch encouragements, the Spaniards had no confidence in this new eftablifhment, but either locked up their money in frong chefts, or folicited the gremios to take it in at a low intereft, whilft in France and Switzerland, monied men came into the fcheme with fuch avidity, that actions bore a premium of three hundred per cent. till fuddenly a panic feized them, and the whole fabric was in danger of inftant rain and deffruction. -To regain their confidence, the bank bought bought in many actions, and lent money at four per cent. to the ftockholders on the fecurity of their actions, engaging at the fame time to pay them their dividend of feven per cent. or more, if it hould be due. This ftrange mancuvre had the defired effect; for the proprietors in Paris, borrowing money of the bank to the amount of twenty millions of reals, for which they were charged only four, whilit, without any riik, they received nine per cent. their former eagernefs returned, and the demand for actions was every where renewed.

It cannot be imagined that the bank long perfevered in this itrange practice. Such conduct muft foon have fript them of their capital; becaufe every proprietor would have borrowed money to the full value of his actions, and the bank would have been annihilated. Therefore, at the fourth general meeting it was refolved, that no more than five hundred reals hould be advanced on one ation of two thoufand.

The profperous condition of this new eftablifhment will appear from a ftatement of its annual gains.

[ 209 ]

By this fatement it appears, that,
5. $\mathrm{I}^{\text {th }}$, The creditof the bank procured a ready circulation for the government paper; becaufe the interef of that proportion, which, during the courfe of the year, was in the poffeffion of the bank, funk from more than three millions and an half to lefs than one million.
$2^{d}$, The difcounting bufinefs increafed to nearly double in the fpace of twelve months.
$3^{d}$, The intereft for money advanced on -actions, fhews clearly, that the proprietors of one-fifth part of the whole capital had withdrawn their proportion; willing at the fame time to take their chance for a dividend, at the fole rilk of thofe, who, from rahnefs, from folly, or from inattention, neglected to follow their example.
$4^{\text {th }}$, The extraction or exportation of fpecie funk confiderably. It was naturally to be expected that this fhould be the cafe. Previous to the infitution of the bank, when government permitted the exportation of fpecie, it was under a duty of four per cent. the average produce of which was about three millions of reals; but when it Vol. II. $P$ became became the intereft of the bank to watch the fmuggler, the duties rofe to fixteen millions. Merchanss, however, when one road is ftopped, exert their fagacity to find out fome other; and, where fuch a commodity as filver is in queftion, they eafily furmount the obfacles oppofed to its exportation.

$5^{\text {th }}$, One fource of profit, producing more than five millions and an half in the year ${ }_{17} 85$, is, in the fubfequent year, dried up. This matter requires to be explained.

The government being much diftreffed for money, had, as all ipendthrifts are forced to do, borrowed on very difadvantageous terms, and then repented of the hard conditions, to which it had confented. The commiffion of ten per cent. appeared exorbitant; and the vouchers produced by the directors of the bank, for the articles they had purchafed on account of the army and the navy, were not fatisfactory to the minifler of the finance. Befides thefe objections, the exhaufted treafury was not in a condition to difcharge its mont reafonable obligations to the bank, and to pay thofe arrears which itfelf acknowledged to be juft. All was in confufion; the minifter continued muttering his threats, and the projector of the bank was loud in his expoftulations.

- The latter fuggefted, with great propriety, that, in a country, where juftice and the laws were filent, and where arbitrary power prevailed, the minifter might for once plunder and feize, with a ftrong hand, the whole of their capital; but that, in fuch a cafe, he muft not expect to be trufted a fecond time, and muft therefore renounce for ever the idea of a bank. This argument was felt; and the minifter determined, that the bank fhould have the contract for the army and the navy at the fame prices as had been laft given to the gremios, and that this new regulation hould have a retrofpect. The bargain was thus made more advantageous for the public ; but how far this tranfaction was agreeable to juitice, it was for the minifter of the finance to fay. i
The gremios, or the five incorporated companies of Madrid, have a joint capital, as factors, to purchafe all commodities, and fell to the retail dealers; the manufacturers being prohibited by law to fell by retail. This body, with a confiderable capital of $\mathrm{P}_{2} \quad \therefore \quad$ its its own, and borrowing as much, as it could empley, at two per cent. had all the contracts for the court, for the prefidios, and for the army, both for food and clothing; but fince the eftablifhment of the bank, this monopoly has hifted hands; and government, inftead of availing itfelf of the competition between the gremios and the bank, has delivered itfelf up to the latter, for the advancement of its credit.

But, as it would not be fufficient to grant beneficial contracts, without fulfilling its engagements, government agreed to give an affignment of the four per cent. duties on the extraction of filver for three years, unlefs the arrears to the bank fhould be previoully difcharged.

Upon coming thus to a mutual underftanding, the directors of the bank agreed to advance money for making a canal from Guadarama, at the foot of the Sierra which divides the two Cattilles, to Seville, and to fuperintend the work, receiving ten per cent. commiffion, and four per cent. per annum, for all the money they fhouid expend.

I might proceed to give fome idea of the Philippine company, in which the bank has has engaged two hundred and ten thoufand pounds fterling, as I have already ftated; but this I fhall referve till I come to Cadiz, when I thall have occafion to treat of commerce, and more efpecially of the trade carried on between the mother country and its. colonies.

Such are the laft returns to government; and, as in the year 1770 , the population, by the fame authority, was ftated to be nine millions three hundred and feven thoufand eight hundred and three, we might haftily conclude that Spain, in the courfe of feventeen years, had increafed nearly one million of inhabitants. In like manner, obferving, A. D. $1_{723}$, the number of fouls. to be feven millions fix hundred and twen-ty-five thoufand, we might infer, that fince that period fhe was advanced in population more than two millions and an half. But the fact is, that the returns to government are not always juft; and Uftariz affures us, that the people, to leffen their contributions of men and money, conceal their numbers, and make falfe returns. He detected many which were a fifth, and fome one half, below the truth.

Now, if from the number above fated as the population of A. D. 1787 , we deduct three hundred and fifty-eight thoufand two hundred and fixty four, thefe being out of the peninfula, and inhabiting either the illands or the coaft of Africa, we fhall have for the remainder nine millions nine hundred

$[218]$

Fundred and nine thoufand eight hundred and eighty-fix; and if we allow the area of Spain to be one hundred and forty-eight thoufand four hundred and forty-eight fquare miles, we fhall find fixty-feven perfons nearly to a mile. This, if compared with the Ruffian empire, is refpectable; but if with France, is below mediocrity. In the former they reckon five to a fquare mile ; in the latter, one hundred and fiftyfeven. England comes in between France and Spain; but Spain, if properly cultivated and well governed, might be the firft in Europe, not excepting Holland, which to its wife and equitable laws is indebted for a population amounting to two hundred and feventy-two on a mile fquare. (Vide Necker and Zimmermann.) Bernardo Ward, who was in the employment of the Spanif government, allows that eighteen thoufand fquare leagues of the richer land are left uncultivated, and that two millions of the people are unemployed. ( $V$. Proyecto Econ. A. D. I750.)

All are agreed that Spain, in more diftant periods, was much better peopled than at prefent; and many have attempted to afign

affign the caufe of its depopulation; but as they commonly fix on one, and feldom think of more than two or three among thofe caufes that are mof obvious, it may be uffeful to trace the various circumitances, which have contributed to deprefs this once powerful nation, and to defolate, at leaft comparatively, one of the richeft countries in Europe,

Ift, In the year 1347, the plague broke out with more than common virulence at Almeria, and, during three years continuance, ravaged Spain to fuch an extent, that many cities were left almoft without inhabitants; and throughout the whole peninfula the population was reduced to onethird of what it had been previous to that event. Of this plague Alfonfo XI. died, whilf conducting the fiege againf Gibraltar. (Campomanes Induftria popular, p. 168. Ponz Viage, tom 8, cap. 5. fect. 60.) Subfequent to this, the country has frequently been laid wafte by peftilential fevers, introduced from Africa, or dating their origin from fome preceding famine. A. and farcely ever is that part of the country free from putrid, intermittent, and contagious fevers. Such a vaft extent of territory as this peninfula contains, without communication either by canals or roads, divided into a multitude of independent kingdoms, or, at a fubfequent period, into provinces, each exacting heavy duties on the introduction of grain, mutt often have felt diftrefs for want of bread. In fact, one province has been reduced to the extremity of famine, whilft others have been ruined by abundance. In Seville, A. D. 1652, wheat fold for $15 s .3 \mathrm{~d}$. the bufhel; and A. D. 1657 , fo low as is. $4 d$. It was not till the year 1752 , that by a wife regulation of the marquis de la Enfenada, corn, was permitted to pals freely, even in Spanifh veffels, from one province to another. (Camp. Educ. pop. Ap. part ii. p. I6.) The confequence of famine, as it is well known, is peftilence.

The common diet of the country predifpofes the inhabitants to receive infection; and the practice of phyficians, in prefcribing venefection indifcriminately to all their patients, tends only to increare the cvil.

[ 221 ]

From all thefe concurring circumftances, few countries have funtained fuch loffes by epidemical difeafes, few have been fo often ravaged by peftilential fevers, - 2d, For more than feven centuries, from the year 7 I4 to 1492, Spain was haraffed by almoft inceffant ftruggles between warlike nations, in the heart of that divided country, contending for dominion; till the marriage of Ferdinand with Ifabella had united the two crowns of Caftille and Arragon, and the conqueft of Granada put a period to the empire of the Moors.

3d, A. D. 1493, Columbus opened a new channel for their ambition, and gave beginning to endlefs emigrations, by the difcovery of America.

Previous to this, the nobility were mofly refident on their eftates, and when not engaged in war, gave themfelves up to the management of their own concerns. Without accumulating treafures, many were able to conduct five or fix thoufand foldiers to the field; but when they had feen the gold and filver of Peru and Mexico, they became reflefs and impatient to obtain employments in thofe countries, and neglected the llower, yet more certain, means of obtaining wealth, by the improvement of their lands. The people in like manner haftened to America in fuch numbers, that the maritime provinces fuffered feverely by the lofs.

Emigrations, if regular and in due proportion, neither weaken the parent ftate, nor fenfibly diminif the remaining ftock; but when they are fudden, and carried beyond certain bounds, they tend to weaknefs and to defolation. The former may be obferved in the highlands of Scotland, in Switzeriand, and in many parts of Germany; the latter was vifible on the firft difcovery of America, and has ever fince been felt. (Vide Oforio difcurfo univerfal; addreffed to Chantes II. A. D. 1686.)

4 th, From she acceffion of Charles I. of Spain, but the Vth of Germany, (A. D. 1506) the nation was engaged in war, with fhort intervals, for more than two centuries, thereby exhaufting the treafures of America, and wafting the blood of its moft adventurous fubjects, in Italy, in Germany, in Flanders, in Portugal, in France, only to gratify the vanity of its fovereigns, and to extend the bounds of their unjuf dominiont The immediate fucceffors of Charles having Spain, Naples, Sicily, Sardinia, Milan, Franch Compté, and feventeen provinces in the low countries, befide Portugal, of which they acquired the fovereignty, A. D. 1580, and boundlefs territories in north and fouth America; this difperfed and moft unwieldy empire, weak in proportion to its vaft extent, confumed perpetually both men and money, without a poffibility of foilidy uniting fuch diftant and difcordant provinces under one command.

At war fucceffively with all the powerts of Europe, Spain enriched her enemies, and became poor herfelf; becaufe, wherever the difplayed her banners, fhe difperfed her treafures, and after the moft fplendid victories never failed to find herfelf exhaufted of her ftrength. At the end of the firft contury fubfequent to the acquifition of America, fhe was reduced to the fad neceflity of debafing her coin, and fo low in credit, that fhe gave more than thirty per cent. for money. This we have on the authority of the univerfity of Toledo, as quoted by count Campomanes in his Educacioiot popular.

5th, The caufe commonly affigned for the depopulation of the countiy, as if it were the only caufe, is the expulfion of the Mioors. (A. D. 1613.) To this may be added the previous expulion of the Jews, to the number of eight hundred thourand, by Ferdinand and Iabella, who banihed there infidels in token of gratitude to heaven for the conqueft of Granada. This wound was grievous; but, before the nation had recovered ftrength, to banifh nine hundred thoufand of its moft indufrious fubjects, was fuch a froke, that to the prefent day it is feverely felt. Under the beft government, with the moft propitious circumftances, it would require ages to retrieve fo great a lofs.
6th, Confequent to the expulfion of the Moors, their repeated and almoft inceffiant depredations along the whole extent of coant, wafhed by the waters of the Mediterranean Sea, rendered the moft fertile parts of Spain unfafe, and the produce exceedingly precarious. For the laft century, the number of Spanifh captives at Algiers, has ufually becn about thirty thousand, and their random has been reckoned, one with another, at a thoufand dollars, or one hundred and fifty pounds, amounting in the whole to four millions and an half fterling. With fuch a premium for the random of their captives; there pirates found ample fupplies for the equipment of their gallies. (V. Camp. Ap. i. 373.) Government has recently ferfled a treaty with the Algerines; and in. that, according to the opinion of count Campomanes, the minifters have fhewn more difcretion, than when they attempted to deftroy that neft of pirates. His judymont is founded on this maxim, divide et imper: fupport the Algerines, that you may weaken the empire of Morocco, $7^{\text {th }}$, Among the defolating caufes, mut be reckoned their change of government, not on account of the blood of their bent citizens, the in the doubtful conflict, for that loft in time might be retrieved, but from the unremitted operation of a bad government. It mut be confeffed, that under defpotifm may accidentally be found wifdom and equity, with wealth and power; but, fince the loft of liberty, there have not been feen in Spain. In national affemblies ${ }_{2}$ able leaders may arife to reprefent their grievances, and to feek redrefs. Had Spain enjoyed her cortes after light was diffufed in Europe, when citizens began to afcertain their rights, and to fhake off the chains of feodal tyranny, fhe would not fo long have groaned under oppreffion.

Although fome grievances, fince the reprefentation of count Campomanes, have been redreffed, yet, by their long continuance, they tended to defolate the country, and therefore well deferve to be recorded. I fhall felect the moft remarkable, and fupport them by quotations from his ineftimable works. Thefe relate to the revenue, the army, and the police.

No country ever invented a more ruinous fyftem of finance, or one lefs friendly. to manufactures and to commerce. The alcavala, with is cientos, being a tax of fourteen per cent. on all commodities, both on the raw materials, and on the fame when manufactured, as often as the property changes hands, rated, not according. to the prime coft, but to the felling price, and therefore confantly increafing, is almoft mof fufficient of itfelf to create a general ftagnation. This effect is evident in Caftille; whilft in Catalonia and in the provinces of Arragon, where Philip V. exchanged this oppreffive tax for the equivalent, induftry prevails, and manufactures flourih. The millones, being a tax upon provifions, tends to increafe the price of labor, and thereby indirectly proves an obftacle to foreign commerce.

With fuch powerful inducements to defraud the revenue, to what innumerable vexations, in order to prevent this, muft the manufacturers and merchants have been fubjected by government, more efpecially when the revenue was let to farmers, who, with their fervants, were an hundred thoufand. Thefe watchful harpies were aushorized to place their fpies at the door of every hop, to examine the tradefman's books, to put their feal on his commodities, to demand the teftimony of thofe, who were fent to purchafe, with the atteftation of the purchafer himfelf, and to require certificates from thofe, on whom. the commodity was found. (Vide Camp. E. P. Ap. iv. p. 244.) The farmers of the taxes were originally Jews; but the wealth to be acquired by plunder made the employment honourable. Their mifconduct called loudly for redrefs, and this grievance is no longer found in Spain. But what hall we fay, thould a more enlightened nation, boafting of freedom, fubmit to fimilar oppreffions?

That the vexations fpecified tended to de-- populate the country muft be evident; that: they produced this effect, Oforio, as quoted by count Campomanes, affures us in his difcourfe on the grievances under which thenation laboured. He afferts, that in the villages, not one-third of the houfes had efcaped the rapacity of thofe who farmed the taxes; becaufe, when nothing elfe remained to the miferable peafants, thefe mercilefs exactors feized their houfes, and fold the materials to the firt, who was in clined to purchafe. This caufe of depopu-: lation was not removed till the year 1749 : (Vide Camp. E. P. Ap. i. p. 347.)

[ 229 ]

ing impofition, the magiftrate authorized to intervene between the buyer and the feller fixed the price of all commodities, even of corn and manufactures, to the fole advantage of alguaziles, regidors, and efcrivanos, but to the deftruction of agriculture, and to the difcouragement of induftry. This evil was introduced by Philip II. when the gold and filver of America had leffened the value of money in the mother country; or as the people in general complained, when every commodity was grown extravagantly dear. It was, however, confined to the kingdom of Cafille; and, confequently the provinces of Catalonia, Arragon, and Valencia, being free, were both more populous and better cultivated than it, although their foil, excepting Valencia, is far from rich. (Vide Camp. E. P. Ap. i. p. 240-254. 365.418 .) As to manufactures, it was in the reign of Alonzo el Sebio, A. D. 1256 , that the magittates firft interfered to fix the price, and this they did without regarding the goodnefs of the materials or the vaiue of the work. The confequence of fuch a regulation is obvious. (Vide Camp. E. P. Ap. iv. p. 64 .)

[ 230 ]

With the intention of rendering provifions cheap, government, till the year 1765 , probibited the exportation of grain. For the honour of Spain we may obferve, that nine years fubfequent to this, M. Turgot prevailed on Lewis XVI. to give fimilar liberty to France, and with the fame good effect. The progrefs of agriculture, the vaft increafe in the quantity of grain, and the diminution in its price, in confequence of this wife regulation, and of the freedom granted to the farmer for the fale of his commodity, are fufficient to evince how much population muft have been retarded by the previous reftraint.
The ignorance and jealoufy of government were not confined to corn, for with the fame contracted views, and influenced by the fame fhort fighted policy, the kings of Spain effectually difcouraged, and cone tinue to difcourage, the breed of borfes, which, if not reftrained, would prove a never failing fource of wealth. The very means adopted to increafe the breed have had the oppofite effect. To confine the market, and thereby to fink the price; to oblige all the farmers to regifter their hories, with with the age, the colour, and the fize; to exact from them a frict account, and to fubject them to heavy fines; to harafs them with unfeafonable vifitors, and to leave them at the mercy of low men in office; furely this can never be the way to promote their induftry, and to encourage them in producing the commodity fo much to be defired. The intention of the king is to mount his cavalry at a fimall expence; but fhould the breeder continue fubject to fuch vexations, the race will fail, and mules will fupply their place. Let the ports be open; extend the market; give freedom to commerce; and leave the farmers unmolefted to purfue their various operations; let their induftry have free fcope to move in; let them be protected in their perfons and their property; then, let the magiftrate retire.

From the fame mintaken policy, dealers, or jobbers, in corn and cattle, have been difcouraged, under an idea that they raifed the price. This efror, however, has not been confined to Spain ; for in the Englifh flatutes are to be found provifions againtt regrators, yet, without middle men, the attention of the farmer would be diftracted, and for want of a ready fale for his commodities, $\mathrm{Q}_{4}$ : he

he would have neither time nor capital to conduct his bufinefs to advantage. There middle men create difpatch, and eventually increare productions. But from a ftrange inconfiftency of principle, whilf middle men, as dealers in corn and cattle, were difcouraged, manufacturers were forbid to fell by retail, left they fhould injure the commerce of the gremias. (Vide Camp. E. P.)

Previous to the year $\mathrm{I}_{75}$, the fibleries were much difcouraged by the rapacity of the corregidors, alcaldes, regidors, and other magiftrates, who plundered the fifhermen of their beft fifh, as a recompenfe for their trouble in making the affize, and then ruined them by fixing the price too low. There grievances I fhall fate in treating of the finhery at Carthagena.

Since the acceffion of the prefent family, found policy has led them to eftablifh barracks; but, previous to the commencement of this century, the military were lodged in the houfes of the peafants. Int the year 1686, Oforio reprefented that quartering the foldiers had deftroyed moft of the villages in Spain. This may be readily conceived, when we are informed that the military flipend was far from being regularly paid.

The ftate of the police I thall give when defcribing Cadiz and Malaga. Here it may be fufficient to obferve, that as the regidors have purchafed their office, they muft naturally feek to indemnify themfelves; and although deputies and fyndics, with equal authority, are now elected by the people, it is only fince the year 1766 , that this palliative expedient has been provided.
The people, thus every where plundered and oppreffed, could not increafe and multiply, as they would have done under a free and equitable government.
$\therefore$ 8th, Convents are by no means favourable to population. There in Spain are eight thoufand nine hundred and thirty-two, containing more than ninery-four thoufand monks and nuns; but the perfons bound to celibacy by vows are not much below two hundred thoufand. Yet this fuperabundạnce of the drones may be confidered not merely as the caufe, but as the effect of their declenfion, being much increafed by the ftagnation of their trade. The univerfity of Toledo, in a memorial delivered to Fhilip III, at the beginning of the feventeentin teenth century, complains, that not onetenth of the ufual number of marriages took place; and particularly fates, that whereas, whilft commerce flourifhed, it had been faid, 2uien ba oficio, ba beneficio, He who bas a trade, has the beft benefice; now all parents, dreading the poverty and wretchednefs attached to trade, were inclined to breed up their children nuns, monks, and parih priefts, or even expofed them to perifh in their infancy. Some of the beft Spanif writers on political economy have declared againt multiplying convents, and the cortes, with the confent of Philip IV. determined, about the middle of the laft century, that no more convents fhould be built; but as general opinion is more powerful than law, this refolution of the cortes remained without effect. Once eftablifhed, they are not eafily fuppreffed, becaufe of innumerable maffes, which muft be daily faid by compact for the fouls in purgatory.

9 th, Numerous feftivals tend to depopulate a country. Benedict XIV. leffened the number in his temporal eftates, and recommended a fimilar reduction to his clergy.

In confequence of this, in the diocefe of Toledo, they have now no more than ninetythree general feftivals, not including the fpecial feftivals of each pariin, and of the religious houfes, which, in every city fwell the number of unproductive days. If to thefe we add the occafional bull feafts, and the Mondays, claimed both by apprentices and journermen for their own diverfion, we fhall have reduced coniderably the number of working days; but even then we muft be obliged to make a frefh reduction from their time, becaufe the working hours are feldom more than fix; infomuch that all the unprofitable hours being carried to account, not more than one-third, or perhaps one-fourth, remains for labour. How then is it poffible to ftand a competition in manufactures with more induftrious nations? ( $V$. Camp. E. P. p. 274.)

- 1oth, Prevalerice of pafture tends to depopulate a country. Grazing and tillage fould ever be united. The fame quantity of land, which, in wild pafture, would require the labour of one family, if tilled, would give employment to twenty, or even twice that number. In Spain, ever fince the year 1350, at which period- the plague had carried off two-thirds of the inhabitants, the laws of the Mefta have fet at variance the ploughman and the fhepherd, preventing each from deriving the leaft advantage from the other, infomuch that five millions of fheep, under the fanction of a peculiar code, not only fail to enrich the lands on which they feed, but effectually prevent its cultivation. Independent of the Merino flock, many of the great landlords have fuffered villages to go to ruin, and have let their eftates to graziers.

isth, The want of an Agrarian Law. Previous to the recovery of the fouthern provinces from the dominion of the Moors, the diftracted and divided fate of the peninfula made it neceffary for the peafants to feek refuge in the cities, or at leaft to affociate in villages for their mutual defence. For this reafon, independent farms, detached and diffant from a town, are feldom, if ever, feen in the fouthern provinces of Spain. The cities, towns, and villages, were built on the moft fertile foots, and between many of them intervened vaft tracts of land, little fufceptible of cultivation. When the plague of the year 1347 had fpread defolation through the country, many towns and villages were fuffered to go to ruin and decay, whereby the diffance between thofe that furvixed was conifderably increafed. To this event has been attributed the extenfive territories of innumerable towns, many of which are from ten to fifteen miles diameter, and therefore too far diftant from the habitation of the farmer to admit of cultivation. Adjoining to the village you obferve vines, olives, figs, and grain; all beyond is defo-* late and wafte.

Previous to the conquef, when the chriftian princes were inclined to make war upon the infidels, they invited the great nobility of other countries, and their own feodal lords, to join them. Many of thefe could bring into the field five or fix thoufand vaffals, and were bound to maintain them, at leaft to the frontiers, at their own expence. But then, as moft of thefe were little lefs than independent fovereigns, the prince was obliged to court them; and, if he would allure them to his ftandard, it was by the hope of making conquefts for themfelyes that he prevailed on them to follow him. Hence they acquired by arms, cities, towns, and villages, with extenfive diftrits.

In fucceeding periods, the great nobility, taking advantage of their fovereign during his minority, when either contending for the regency themfelves, or embarraffing the regent, they extorted coníderable grants from the king's demefne, confifting of cities, towns, and villages, with the adjacent territories; all which they tranfmitted to their pofterity.

By intermarriages, many of thefe vaft poffeffons have been united; infomuch that three great lords, the dukes of Ofuna, Alba, and Medina Cœli, cover almoft the whole province of Andalufia; and the laft of thefe, claims by inheritance, the greateft part of Catalonia.

Such vaft poffeffions paffing by entail, are far from being friendly to population, more efpecially as the proprietor never refides on his eftates, and, being often embatraffed in his circumftances, has little inclination, and lefs ability, to make improvements for his heir.

added, the defect of fubffantial tenants. I have already remarked, when fpeaking of the court, that moft of the great eftates are in adminiftration, that is, cultivated by ftewards on the lords account, and therefore not productive. If tenanted, the rent commonly is paid in kind; and this, when, from bad crops, corn is dear, ruins the farmer. In fuch circumftances, it is difficult to raire a tenantry with fufficient capitals to ftock a farm. In tillage, it is found, that, to occupy an eftate to advantage requires a capital more than equal to five times the rent. But in Spain, few fuch are to be found. Should they, however, perfect what the wifert among them, with count Campomanes for their guide, have been long attempting, an agrarian law; fhould they, as propofed, allow every man to cultivate what quantity he pleafes of wafte land, without a fecial grant from the proprietor, and to enjoy it as a copyhoid, charged with a quit-rent equal to the value, previous to this improvement; in procefs of time they will raife up both a yeomanry and tenantry, and, in confequence, a more numerous population.

[ 240 ]

13th, Royal Manufactures and Monopolizes have a baneful influence on population; for, as no private adventurers can ftand the competition with their fovereign, where he is the great monopolift, trade will never profper. The Spanifh monarch is a manufacturer of Broad cloth, at Guadalajara and Brihuega;
China, at the palace of the Buen Retiro;
Cards, at Madrid and Malaga;
Glafs, at S. Ildefonfo; Paper, in Segovia;
Pottery, at Talavera;
Salt Petre, Madrid, and various other places;
Stockings, at Valdemoro;
Swords, at Toledo;
Tapeftry, at Madrid;
Tiffue, at Talavara.
He has the monopoly of brandy, cards, gun-powder, lead, quickfilver, fealing wax; falts, fulphur, and tobacco.

14th, To this may be added, as a caufe of depopulation, the national prejudice againft trade. Whilt the Jews were merchants, and the mechanic arts were left, either to the Moors, or to the vileft of the people, the grandees or knights were ambitious only only of military fame. After the conqueft of Granada, the Moors continued to be the principal manufaturers, and exceiled in the cultivation of their lands. When thefe, with the Jews, were banined, a void was left, which the high-fpirited Spaniard was not inclined to fill. Trained for many centuries to the exercife of arms, and regarding fuch mean occupations with difdain, his averfion was increafed by his hatred and contempt for thofe, whom he had been accuftomed to fee engaged in thefe employments. He had been early taught to confider trade as difhonourable; and whether he frequented the theatre, or liftened to the difcourfes of the pulpit orators, he could not fail to be confirmed in his ideas. Even in the prefent day, many, who boaft their defcent from noble anceftors, had rather farve than work, more efpecially at thofe trades by which, according to the laws, they would be degraded, and forfeit their nobility.

We muft not imagine that the Spaniards are naturally indolent; they are remarkable for activity, capable of fremuous exertions, and patient of fatigue: if, therefore, Vol. II. $\quad$ unemployed, unemployed, this mun be attributed to other caufes, of which, refpecting fone occupations, national prejudice is one.

I5th, Among the defolating caures, I muft be allowed to mention one, on the teftimony of a native Spaniard, becaufe I never had occafion to obferve the leaf trace of it myfelf. It is acknowiedged by count Campomanes, that the national prejudice was againfl the fetilement of foreigners in Spain. A. D. 1623 , ftrangers were allowed to be naturalized, and either to take farms or to practife their mechanic arts, provided they fettled at the diffance of twenty leagues from the fea coaft; but as few, if any ftranger's availed themfelves of this indulgence, his prefent majenty, in the year 1772, extended this privilege to merchants, permitting them to be effablifhed in any of the ports. Certain it is, that, for want of intercourfe with other nations, the native Spaniards, being chiefly refident at home, excepting thofe who migrate to America, and few ftrangers even pafing through the councry; all the arts, fciences, and manufactures have been at a ftand, and appear to be at leaft a century behind the reft of

[ 243 ]

Europe. In the year 1655 , don Francifo Martinez de Mata, an author of high reputation, in his feventh difcourfe on the depopulation of Spain, complained, that a hundred and twenty thoufand frangers, working cheaper, and apparently better, than the natives, were allowed to fpread over the country; entering it poor, but by their diligence acquiring weaith, and returning home loaded with gold. He afferts, that they carried out with them annually more than eight hundred thoufand pounds, or feven million three hundred and twenty thoufand ducats; but he forgets to mention, that thefe men only flled up the vacancy recently made by the expulfion of the Moors, and followed the occupations to which the high bred Spaniard would not fubmit. He recommends giving alms to ftrangers, but not employment; and, to confirm his advice, relates the hiftory of a Spanifh farrier, as an example to be followed. This man went to Paris, with a view to work at his trade, but being threatened with death, fhould he there venture to exercife his art, he retired to Bourdeaux, where he hoped to find a more hofpitable R 2 reception; reception; but there they cut off one arm, that he might no longer wori, and rob the native farrier of bread. (Camp. E. P. A. 4. p. 184.)

[ 244 ]

16th, Perfecution is a powerful caufe of depopulation; and, like the national prejudice againft ftrangers, prevents many ufeful fubjects from being added to the flate. It were endlefs to enumerate the advantages a community derives from toleration. As without an eftablifhed religion the poor would be neglected, and, in the villages at leaft, would be in danger of lofing all knowledge of a deity; fo, without a toleration, there could be no competition, and therefore little fcope for emulation, without which zeal would be apt to languif, morals to decay; and thus in procefs of time, the moft important truths would, by the many, be totally forgotten.

The good binop of Oviedo, lamenting over the manners of the age, comforted himfelf at laft under a perfuafion, that, through the activity and zeal of the inquifitors, they had no infidels in Spain. For my part, I am perfuaded, that the torpid insdelity of ignorance prevails more in Spain,

[ 245 ]

Spain, than the active infidelity of fcience in either England or France.

All the enlightened nations of Europe have at laft difcovered the folly of perfecution, and feem to be perfuaded, that the refort of ferangers, with their wealth, their knowledge, their induftry, and arts, will bear proportion to the extent of toleration. It is now generaliy felt, that thefe contribute to enrich, and, by the increafe of people, to make mof powerful the country, in which the citizens, without difinction, enjoy moft civil and religious liberty.

I $7^{\text {th }}$, The gold and Jiver of America, inftead of animating the country and promoting induftry, inftead of giving life and vigout to the whole community, by the increafe of aits, of manufactures, and of commerce, had an oppofite effect, and produced in the event, weaknefs, poverty, and depopulation. The wealth which proceeds from induftry refembles the copious yet tranquil ftream, which, paffing filent and almoft invifible, enriches the whole extent of country through which it flows: but the treafures of the new world, like a fwelling torrent, were feen, were heard, R3 were were felt, and were admired; yet their firft operation was to defolate and lay wafte the fpot on which they fell. The fhock was fudden; the contraft was too great. Spain overflowed with fpecie, whill other nations were comparatively poor in the extreme. The price of labour, of provifions, and of manufactures bore proportion, to the quantity of circulating cafl. The confequence is obvious: in the poorer countries induftry advanced, in the more wealthy it declined; in the more wealthy all the manufactures went to ruin and decay, every thing was imported from abroad, and, till the beg nning of the prefent century, Spain purchafed all her men of war, with maits and cordage, from Holland, rigging from France, ammunition from England, and even her gallies from the Genoefe. V. Martinez de Mata, Difcurfo 8 .

Combined with all the forementioned caufes of depopulation, this became more fatal to the profperity of Spain than it would have been, had circumftances been more propitious. Had the country been populous and well governed, had peace, been cultivated, and had the manufactures

[ 247 ]

Hourifhed, had the convents been recentily deftroyed, and the feitivals abolifhed, had emigration ceafed, and had ftrangers reforted to fettle in the country with their induftry and arts; this wealth would have given new vigour to the nation. But, inftead of this benign effect, numerous convents were endowed, the drones were multiplied, and this fudden repletion produced a torpor, ending in a political difeafe, fimilar to that which, in like circumftances, affects the human frame. Even in the prefent day, fpecie being about fix per cent. lefs valuable in Spain than it is in other nations, operates precifely in the fame proportion againft her manufactures and her population.

18th, Among the caufes of depopulation count Campomanes reckons corporations with exclufive privileges, checking the induftrious, and reftraining them from the exercife of thofe mechanic arts for which they are qualified, and to which they feel themfelves inclined, and eftablihhing monopolies, to the prejudice of the community.

In Spain thefe are certainly injurious to 2 degree fcarcely to be conceived by thofe R 4

who have not been witnefies to fimilar abufes. In all the trading companies or gremios, religious fraternities are formed, fome incorporated by royal authority and letters patent, others by connivance of the crown, but both in violation of the laws.

Every fraternity is governed by a mayor and court of aldermen, who make laws, fit in judgment on offenders, and claim in many cafes exemption from the common tribunals of the country. None but the members of thefe communities may exercife mechanic arts, or be concerned in trade; and to be admitted as a member is both attended with a heavy fine, and entails upon each individual a conftant annual expence.

This, however, is not the greatef evil, for the mayor and officers, during their year of fervice, not only neglect their own affairs, but from vanity and onentation tun into expences, fuch as either ruin their families, or at leaft ftraiten them exceedingly in trade.

There corporations, being eftablifned in the cities, banifh, by their oppreffive laws, all the mechanic arts from towns and vil§ lages:

lages. In the cities likewife they tend only to monopoly, by limiting the numbers in every branch of bufinefs, and fixing within unreafonable bounds the refidence of thoie who are concerned in trade. This they do either by affigning the difance between fhop and hop, under pretence that two hops vending the fame commodities mult not be fo near together as to interfere, or by affembling all the mechanics of the fame profeffion, fuch as filverfmiths, and confining them to one ftreet or quarter of the city, under the plaunble pretext that thus the proper magiftrate may with eafe pay attention to their work, and fee that the due standard be obereved.

In many cafes the various gremios bear hard upon each other. Thus, for inftance, the carpenter mun not employ his induftry on mahogany, or any other wood but deal, nor muft he invade the province of the turner. The turner muft confine his ingenuity and labour to foft wood, and muf not prefume to touch either ivory or metals, even though he hould be reduced to poverty for want of work. The wheeler, in finilar diftrefs, muft not, however qualifed, extend extend his operations beyond the appointed bounds, fo as to encroach on the buffnefs of the coachmaker, who is equally reftrained from either making or mending either cart or waggon wheels. The barber may have, draw teeth, and bleed, but he muft not fill up his leifure time with making wigs. As mechanics are obliged to heep exafly each to his feveral line, fo muft fopkeepers confine themelves to their proper articles in trade, and under no pretence muft the manufacturer prefume to open magazines, that he may fell by retail.

But neither are thefe abufes the only evils which call for reformation. Many corporations have been impertinently meddiing, and have abfurdily bound the hands of the manufackurer by regulations with refpect to the conduct of his bufinefs, and the productions of his att, fuch as being too rigidly obferved would preclude all improvements, and would be deftructive to his trade, by giving to foreigners a manifef advantage in favour of their merchandize.

and their corporate expences amount to $11,687,86 \mathrm{r}$ reals. Their revenue is not altogether confumed in feafting, nor in falaries to officers, nor in penfions to their widows, nor yet in law fuits, which are faid to be both numerous and expenfive; but confiderable fums are expended for religious purpofes, in procuring maffes to be faid, either for departed fpirits, and the fouls in purgatory, or for the benefit of the fraternity in which each individual has a proportionable interef. For this reafon, thefe communities enjoy the protection of the ecclefiaftical courts, to which, in cafes of neceffity, they frequently appeal.

The chartered corporations claim their exclufive privileges by royal grant, and on this plea they refift a reformation, not confidering, as count Campomanes with propriety remarks, the effential condition of thefe grants, Sin perjuicio de tercero, or that nothing therein contained fhall be to the preiudice of others, or injurious to the citizens at large.

19th, Similar to the former in operation, as checking manufactures, and thereby diminifhing the population of a country, may be

be reckoned fumptuary laws. It is Baron. Montefquieu who applies this remark to Spain, and facts certainly vincicate his obfervation; for had their drefs been left to the whim and the caprice of the inhabitants, the more delicate manufactures, now loft, would, by the certainty of a ready market, have been retained among them.

20th, Had all Europe continued upon one level; the above fated caufes of depopulation had not been fo feverely felt in Spain. But, unhappily for her, thefe were rendered more defructive by the rifing induftry, and confequent profperity, of rival nations, in which convents were left empty, numerous feftivals abolifhed, to which ftrangers might refort, where property had been long fince more equally divided, and where new leant commerce led to wealth and power. Thefe nations, in proportion as civil, religious, and commercial liberty advanced, grew into greatnefs; and, like the fpreading oak cafting a flade on the more weakly faplings, did not fuffer them to rife.

civil, religious, and commercial liberty; the wealth and profperity of one will extend to ali. But hould one nation continue free, in the full poffeffion of public confidence and public credit, whilt another is governed by defpotic fway, fubject to the capricious will of a weak prince, or of a wicked minifter, and therefore deftitute of public confidence and public credit; the former will increafe in wealth and power, the latter will decay, and freemen will give law to flaves.

With fo many fubfifing caufes of depopulation in vain did Philip IV. A. D. I623, by a fpecial edict, offer a premium for marriage. In vain did he grant all the privileges of nobility to be enjoyed for four years to all new married men; in vain did he deprive the nobles of their privileges if unmarried at the age of twenty-five; and in vain did he offer all the exemptions of nobility for life to the fathers of fix children : but fhould the people take advantage of the prefent crifis to banifh the inquifitors, and to affert their freedom; fhould they, happy in poffeifing one of the richeft countries upon earth, contract the bounds of their unwieldy unwieldy empire ; thould they conine their views within the limits of their own peninfula, and cultivate the arts of peace; fhould they, to cherifh induftry, abolifh the monaftic orders, leffen the number of their feftivals, eftablifh an agrarian law, and frike off the fetters, by which their commerce has been bound; confidering the foil, the climate, the abundance of water, the natural productions, the rivers, the harbours, and the local fituation, we may venture to affirm, that no country, of the fame extent, would be more populous, more wealthy, or more powerful, than Spain.

Let her for ever keep her true intereft in view, and all Europe muft rejoice in her profperity.

Before I turn my back upon Madrid, I muft briefly defcribe the minifters of fate, and fome principal characters about the court, previoully noticing the change in the conftitution of their government.

It is well known that the government was feodal; that Spain enjoyed the protection of its cortes; and that the power of the monarch was circumfcribed by laws. At prefent, no fovereign can be more defpotic.

[ 253 ]

fpotic. The tranfition forms a moft interefting epoch in their hitory, but fuch as would require more time in its developement, than a travelier can befow. Whenever I fhall have an opportunity to refume this fubject, I hall endeavour to fhew, that Spain, like all other countries which have lof their liberty, was ruined by the inordinate ambition, and by the unjuit pretenfions of the great. Whilf labouring to curb the monarch, and to deprefs the people, they themfelves have funk, have lof their power, and are become perfect cyphers, affembled round the fovereign like prifoners, or at beft, like fervants, and not like pillars to fupport his throne.

Should, however, this change in the conflitution of their govemment ultimately lead them to a more perféci fyftem, it will have been productive of much good to the community; becaufe, during the feodal ages, the fupreme authority was not regulated by confiftent and reafonable principles. The country for many centuries was divided and fubdivided into numerous kingdoms, fome making profeffion of chriftianity, others devoted to the doctrines and precepts of the koran.

koran. The fubjecis of the latter, that is of the Mahometan princes, long accuftomed to defpotic fway, had neither inclination nor ability to affert their freedom; thofe of the former, or rather their military chiefs, wholly unacquainted with the fundamental principles of government, could never be reconciled to a due fubordination in obedience to equitable laws. Thofe haughty nobles, the rude defcendants of the Goths and Vandals, whilf they oppreffed their waftals, fpurned at the idea of fubjection, and not only, like independent princes, made war upon each other, but, whenever they conceived themfelves aggrieved, even by the fovereign, they threatened him.with violence.

As among the Gothic tribes any adventurous leader was under obligation to confult his officers, who followed his fandard, not from neceffey, but from inclination and opinion; fo, when making conquefts by their valcur for himelf and them, he arrived at empire, and they became his borons, he fill continued to afk their advice on all emergencies, more efpecially in whatever related to either peace or war. But when

when he wanted a pecuniary aid, he applied, as was natural, to his commercial cities, inviting them to fend their deputies, who might affemble with the barons, afs fifted by the officers of his court, to deliberate on the expediency of fuch meafures, as fhould be recommended to their confideration. Thus we take notice of the commons, for the firft time, in the cortes of Arragon, A. D. II 33, and of Catalonia, A. D. 1283 , introduced for the purpofe of voting the fupplies. As for the ecclefiaffics, it was not, at leaft in Arragon, till the commencement of the fourteenth century, that they were fummoned to attend the cortes.

Thefe were the three orders, which in Cafille compofed the great council of the kingdom. The firft branch confinted of the grandees, the titular nobility, and thofe among the cavaliers, who could claim this difinction in right of their progenitors. The archbihops and bihops compofed the fecond clafs; and deputies from the commons occupied the third. The latter came as reprefentatives from the kingdoms of Burgos, Leon, Granada, Seville, Cordova, Murcia, Jaen, and Toleco; from the cities Vol. II. S of Valladolid, Segovia, Salamanca, Avila, Toro, Zamora, Cuenca, Soria, and Guadalajara; from the village of Madrid; and in latter times from Galicia, under the denomination of a city.

When the cortes were affembled, the king, fitting under the canopy of fate, affifted by the fupreme council of Caftille, acquainted them with the reafon of his calling them together, ftating the various matters which were to be the fubjects of difcuffion. One of the deputies from Burgos, as prolocutor, anfwered, that they were difpofed to ferve his majefty, and begged leave to affemble with the prefident of his council, that they might confer together on the propofitions, which were fubmitted to their judgment. The chambers then proceeded to confider feparately what anfwer it would be proper to return, and after mature deliberation, when they had communicated to each other their refpective refolutions, they tranfmitted their final determination to the king. The commons at the fame time made known their grievances, and fought redrefs; in confequence of which the king made fuch provifions as prudence dictated and the exigency of the times required.

In Arragon, befide the ricos bombres, or the nobles, the ecclefiaftics and the commons, the cavaliers or hidalgos conftituted a fourth order in the cortes. This affembly of the eftates appears to have been more numerous than the cortes of Caftille. Befide the archbinhop of Zaragoza, and the bifhops of the kingdom, many abbots and priors clained a right to be confulted; and to the chamber of the commons nine and twenty cities, communities, and towns fent deputies. Thefe were the cities of Żaragoza, Huefca, Tarazona, Jaca, Barbaftro, Calataynd, Daroca, Teruel, Borja, Albarracin; the town of Alcañiz ; the communities of Calataynd, Daroca, and Ternel; and the towns of Fraga, Montalvan, Monzon, Sarinena, S. Efteban de Litera, Tamarite, Magallon, Bolea, Alquezar, Ainfa, Loharre, Mofqueruela, Murillo, Berbegal, Almudevar, Alagon, and Canfranc. But the deputies from Exea, Taufte, Uncaftillo, Sos, and Sadava took their feats with the hidalgos.

mandate, continued their feffion only forty days, after which the affembly was of courfe diffolved; but in the intermediate fpace, the cortes were equally diffolved if the fovereign abfented himfelf without having prorogued them. When affembled, the archbihop of Zaragoza, as prefident, addreffed the throne, affuring his majefty of their fidelity, and that after mature deliberation they fhould come to fuch refolutions, as would be moft conducive to the fervice of God, of the king, and of his kingdom. They made laws, granted fupplies, and gave their fanction to either war or peace.

In Catalonia, as in Caftille, the cortes was compored of three eftates, or, as the Spaniards call them, arms. The ecclefiaftical arm confifed of the archbifhop of Tartagona, prefident, eight bihops, twentytwo mitred abbots, nine fyndics from the cathedrals of the province, with the grand prior and cafteilain of Amporta. The military arm included the duke of Cardona, prefident, all the counts, vifcounts, barons, titular nobility, and cavaliers of the firf quality. Syndics or teprefentatives from Barce-iona, Gerona, Lerida, Tortofa, Cervera, Balaguer, and from twenty-four royal boroughs, confituted the tbird eiftate, or, as it is called, the royal arm. Brazo real.

In Navarre, the cortes bore refemblance to the former. :0,

It appears, by the 5 th article in the requifitions of the Santa Junta, that the reigning monarchs, ever watchful to extend the bounds of their prerogatives, and to advance their power, had, by places and penfions judicioully beftowed, maintained a corrupt influence in the popular affembly; for, as we have already feen, when giving a deEcription of Toledo, the Funta infifted that the reprefentatives of the commons fhould be paid by their conftituents and receive neither place nor penfion from the crown,

Yet, notwithftanding all that could be offered to the avarice or to the ambition of the members, the cortes, ever troublefome in reprefenting grievances, and difficult to manage, occafioned fuch embarrafiment to the kings, and to their minifters, that, not defirous of liftening to complainto, they were tardy in their application to this untractable affembly, and never but from abfolute neceffity iffued a proclamation for calling them together.

Charles V. in whofe perfon the two crowns of Caftille and Arragon were firft united, had been readily acknowledged by the cortes of both kingdoms, and the former had given him money, but the latter had refufed a grant, till their grievances fhould be redreffed. The cortes of Catalonia had followed their example. This refiftance iffued in a civil war, and among the leading propofitions for reftoring peace it was demanded, that the cortes fhould af? femble once in three years to confult on public affairs. For this they fought; but their army being defeated, and at length difperfed (A. D. I 522.) no attention was paid to their demand, and the cortes were never permitted to affemble, excepting when the treafury was exhaufted, and wanted frefh fupplices.

But although depreffed, the fpirit of the cortes continued unfubdued. They infifted, according to their ancient privilege, firft to examine grievances, and then to grant fupplies. Charles intreated them not to lofe their time in needlefs debates, when they fhould be voting money, and folemnily protefted, that he would not refufe them any thing, which in reafon they could afk, provided they would firft comply with his requeft. In confequence of this engagement on his part, they indifcreetly voted four millions of ducats, a fum nearly equal to half a million of our money, to be paid in three years; after which he fpeedily difmiffed them.

That was the mortal blow to their authority, and from that time to their final diffolution, A. D. 1647 , the cortes may be regarded as an appendage only of the treafury.

If in any future period light fhould penetrate and be diffufed in Spain, we may venture to predict, that the people will have neither patience nor inclination to confult the mufty records of the cortes, in order to difcover what are their rights, and what the degree of freedom they may juftly claim. But, hould they take a retrofpective view, they will look beyond the feodal ages, and find their claims, not in royal grants and charters, but in the tacis agreement between the ruler and the ruled, when, for the good of the community, civil politics were formed.

The reigning monarch, Charles III. has never been confidered as a man of more than common abilities; but all who know him, admire the goodnefs of his heart; and indeed it is impoffible to look at him without reading difinctly the characters of benevolence and trath. As a man of principle, he efteems it his firt duty to promote the happinefs of the nation, over which he reigns; and if at any time his conduct hath been inconffifent with his principles; if he hath contracted unnatural alliances, without either the plea of neceffity or profpect of advantage; if, in defence of a relation, he hath haftily engaged in war; it hath been always from goodnefs of heart, and from the influence of gratitude, that he hath erred. In choofing his miniters he confults only the good of his people; and it muft be confeffed, that commonly he is well directed in his choice.

in Murcia. He himfelf, early in life, was taken into the houfe of Benevente, as advocate to the duke of Arcos, under whofe patronage he became fifcal, or one of the judges of Caftille. In this employ he made himfelf confpicuous, by feconding the views of count d'Aranda for the expalfion of the jefuits, and by quieting the tumults which, upon that occafion, the bifhop of Cuenca, a prelate exceedingly attached to thofe intriguing fathers, had excited. After their expulfion, he was fent as ambaffador to Rome, where he acquired much reputation, by obtaining the fanction of the pope to meafures, which, in the event, have proved moft fatal to the papal power. From Rome he was called by his fovereign to direct his councils, whilft the marquis of Grimaldi, who had been minifter, was ordered to replace him at the holy fee; and count d'Aranda, who, as prefident of the council and captain general of Caftille, had been omnipotent, after having rendered the moft important fervices to his country, was fent ambaffador to Paris.

fhewn a marked attention to the houfe of Benevente, and has proved, that he retains a grateful remembrance of the protection received at his firf entrance into life.

Whilt at Cuenca, he had lodged in the houie of don Pedro de Lerena, one of thofe favourites of fortune, who, without natural pretenfions, with littie exertion, and lefs merit, are raifed so the higheft ftations, and to the enjoyment of every comfort that wealth can purchafe:

> Juvemal.

Don Pedro de Lerena, fon to a miferable publican at Valdemoro, was bound apprentice to a blackfmith, who lived oppofite to his father's houfe. In a lucky hour he married a rich widow of Cuenca, and, by the interef of her family, became fome little official in that city. Here he had the good fortune to receive under his roof Monino, now count Florida Blanca, and to fecure a place in his good opinion. When the count took the reins of government, he was not unmindiful of his friend, but embraced the earlieft opportunity of ferving him. Under fuch a powerful patron, Lerena became agent to the army in Minorca, and, after the capture of that ifland, went with the duke of Crillon to Gibraltar in the fame capacity, and at the termination of the war, he became intendant of Andalufia, and affiftant of Seville. Whilf he continued in that employment, he procured, after the cuftom of his country, certificates of his good conduct from all kinds of bodies, civil, military, and ecclefiaftical, and from individuals of eminence, all which, being fubmitted to the infpection of the king, procured him, on the death of don Miguel de Mufquiz, the appointment to the high and important offices of the finance and war.

The family of the Galvez, equally fortunate, were all men of fuperior talents. Don Jofeph de Galvez, marquis of Sonora, and minifter of the Indies, was of a mean family, near Malaga, in the fouth of Spain, but, by his great abilities, he raifed himfelf and his relations to the higheft honours of the fate. His two brothers drove boricos, and were called $\mathcal{T}_{i}$, an appeliation anfwering to uncle, or to gaffer; yet one of them became became viceroy of Mexico, and, at his death, was fucceeded in the fame regal office by his fon.

Don Antonio Valdes, the prefent minifter of the marine, ftands indebted to his merit for his high fation. As a captain of the navy, and as a commodore, he was diftinguifhed; and how much the nation is indebted to his fingular abilities, and more than common application, will appear, when, in defcribing Cadiz, I hall give a ftatement of the marine, and fhew the increafing power of the Spanih navy. Till I had been at the fea-ports, I could form no idea of his fuperior talents, and therefore profited little by his condefcending permiffion to approach him. I can only now lament that I did not fpend more time in his fociety.

Of Count Campomanes I have already fpoken. All who have the honour of being near to him, admire the boundlefs extent of his abilities, which embrace every fcience; and the goodnefs of his heart, which turns all his knowledge towards one object-the profperity of his country. He thines in all the feveral branches; but his peculiar excellence is in law, hiftory, and轎:

political œconomy. He is wholly indebted to himfelf, and to the voice of the nation, for his elevation.

It muft be friking to an Englifhman to fee all the moft important offices occupied by men, who have been taken from the lower ranks, and not to find among them one man of falhion, not one grandee of Spain. Thefe are all precifely where they ought to be: lords of the bed-chamber, grooms of the ftole, mafters of the horfe, all near the throne, partaking of its fplendor, whilft the drudgery and refponfibility of office is left to others, who are better qualified to bear that burden. In England it is far otherwife : our men of fahion, from their infancy, are trained to high purfuits; at fchool they learn ambition, and when they come into the houfe of commons, they fee, that to be diftinguifhed for application and for knowledge is the only way to gain confideration, and to arrive at power. This proves fuch a fpur to diligence, that, in fite of their hereditary wealth and honours, many of the greateft men, and the moft able minifters, are to be. foind among our principal noblity.

[ 270 ]

In Spain, on the contrary, in the higher ranks, all is torpid. Satisfied with hereditary wealth and honours, the grandees fink into mere fenfualifts, and are loft. Nay, fuch is the general neglect of education, that the principal minifters find it dificult to procure proper men to fill the common offices.

When my friend, don Eugenio Izquierdo, returned from Paris, where he had been educated for the royal cabinet of natural hiftory, of which he was appointed director on the death of Davila; he was defired immediately to make out a catalogue, in order to convince the world, that Spain was not behind other nations in this interefting branch of fcience, and that he might affift to wipe away the reproach, which M. Maffon had caft upon the nation. He was revolving this commiffion in his mind, but ere he could begin the previous arrangement of the cabinet, he was hurried away to teach the art of dying, and to fuperintend the cloth manufacture at Guadalajara, where all was in confufion, and where every branch required a reform.

temptible philofopher, a wife man is every thing, either an humble mechanic, or a minifter of fate ; and certainly, with time, .he may be qualified for either. But however quailified my friend might be for this new employment, he could not hew himfelf at Guadalajara without danger; for the momenc he appeared, he found himfelf in a neft of hornets. All who had been accuftomed to eat the bread of idlenefs, to receive their falaries, and to neglect their work, or to fhare among themfelves the plunder of the ftate, became his enemies, and, as I underftand, never left him, till by their perfecution, at the end of two years, they had compelled him to retire.

His friend Angulo, trained by him at Paris for the branch of natural hiftory, whofe ambition it was to be vice-director of the cabinet, no fooner returned to court, than he was appointed chemical profeffor, and received orders to prepare for giving a courfe of lectures the enfuing winter. Aftonifhed at this command, he inquired for the elaboratory and the apparatus. He was told, that the foundation of the former fhould be inftantly laid, and that he himfelf muft mult give orders for the latter. But before he had time to look about him, he was fent by the minifter of the finance to fuperintend the working of a lead mine at Linares. My friend acquitted himfelf to the fatisfaction of the minifter, and was appointed director general of all the mines in Spain. In this capacity he was fent to Riotinto, where I engaged to follow him, but when I came near the place, I found he had been difpatched to another part of the kingdom, to infpect a mine fuppofed to be of cinnabar. Samples of this ore had been fent to the minifter of the finance, with the quickfilver extracted from it, which was in abundance; and the mof flattering hopes were entertained at Madrid of the wealth to be obtained from this new difcovery. But, unfortunately, the whole was a deception; and my friend, mortified at firft at not being able to detect a fingle particle of mercury, was at laft fo happy as to extort a confeffion from the impoftor, of the means made ufe of to deceive the minitter, under the expectation of being appointed manager of this rich mine.

the king's theatre; but when a proper perfon was wanted to conduct one of the public prints, he was appointed to that office, and, being a man of letters, he acquitted himfelf to the fatisfaction of the court. On the death of M. Davila, when don Eugenio Izquierdo became the principal direar of the cabinet, and a proper perfon, as vice director, was wanted to fucceed him, the minifter of finance fixed on my friend Clavijo, and will, I am perfuaded, find in him, that a wife man is every thing. This gentleman hath already tranflated the works of the count de Buffon; and, fhould he be left quietly in his department, from his abilities and his application, it may be hoped, that he will make a rapid progrefs in the fcience of natural hiffory. Yet, fuch is the fcarcity of able men, that, in all probability, M. Clavijo will foon receive fome new commiffion.

During my winter's refidence at Madrid, I cultivated the acquaintance of colonel Nodin, an Italian officer in the Spanifh fervice, diftinguilhed for his proficiency in algebra. This gentleman was fo happy as to attract the notice of the minifter, and Vol. II. T received received a commiffion to perfect the navigation at Tortofa, where almoft infuperable difficulties occurred. He was preparing to fet out, when I left Madrid with the pleafing expectation of meeting him at the place of his deftination; but on my arrival, I found that he had been fent into the north of Spain, to make a road, where the minifter of finance conceived that algebraical calculations might be ufeful.

It would be inexcufeable in fpeaking, even in the moft tranfient manner of men, who are diftinguifhed in Madrid as employed about the court, not to mention the two brothers Yriarte, who, for tafte, for judgment, and for fcience, have few fuperiors in the moft enlightened countries. Don Bernardo has fome place in the finance, but his brother is the man of letters.

There was a time when the apothecary, don Cafimiro Gomez Ortega, was the only perfon qualified to teach either botany, chemifty, mineralogy, or natural hiftory; but he has lived to fee many competitors for fame, not excepting his favourite fcience, in which he moft excels.

[ 275 ]

Don Antonio Solano, profeffor of experimental philofophy, merits attention for the clearnefs and precifion of his demonftrations; but, unfortunately, although his lectures are delivered gratis, fuch is the want of tafte for fcience in Madrid, that nobody attends them.

Gratitude, as well as the higheft veneration, requires that I hould mention don Francifco Bayer, firf librarian to his majefty, and late preceptor to the infant don Gabriel, a prince who flands high in the republic of letters, for his elegant tranlation of Salluft; in this work we evidently fee the mafter's hand, but the pupil is faid to deferve his thare of praife.
The laft perfon I fhall mention, who is diftinguifhed for his talents, although not the leaft deferving of commendation, is Jüan Bautifta Muñoz, hiftoriographer to the king, with fpecial commiffion to write the conqueft of America. This gentleman honoured me with his friendhip, and fuffered me to examine freely all his manufcripts. He was feven yeats collecting his materials, and, for that purpofe, vifited every part of Spain, where the families and defcendants of the firtt adventurers refide, or where any public records are preferved. His collections are voluminous, and, 1 have no doubt, will be given to the world with the impartiality becoming an hiftorian, and with that degree of elegance, which may be well expected from an author of his fuperior talents. He is a man of a clear head, a good claffical fcholar, and perfectly acquainted with the characteriftic excellence of thofe, either in Greece or Rome, who have been moft admired for hiftorical compofition. From him, therefore, not merely fomething new, but fomething highly interefting, may be expected, and fuch as I may ventire to fay will vindicate the national character from the charge of cruelty, with which it has been ftained, and leave the reproach, where we might naturally look for it, in the rapacity of undifciplined and defperate adventurers.
T. 2 defcendants

Had Dr. Robertion, or had his friend Mr . Waddilove, known where to look for records, and fpent feven years in making the collection, his work had been much more worthy of the public eye. He has, however, feized the ground, and when there there new materials fhall appear, he will employ them to advantage; and, both by his arrangement, and by the peculiar graces of his Atile, confirm the reputation his former writings have acquired for him; and, if we may be allowed the expreffion, put the laft finih to the temple of his fame.

When I was about to leave Madrid, I addreffed myfelf to my old friend Canofa, and, in a laughing way, defired that he would procure me letters of recommendation for the fouthern provinces. He at once promifed that I fhould have them; but, not fatisfied with this mode of application, I defired Mr. Lifton to beg from count Florida Blanca a letter for Murcia, the place of his nativity. The count obligingly inquired, what route I meant to take? and, in a few days, fent me letters to all the governors of provinces, and to fome principal perfon in every city, through which I was to pafs.

Nothing then remained, but to form a party, and to hire a carriage for the journey.

In the mean time I procured proper paff T 3 ports,

[ 278 ]

ports, one from the minifter, another from count Campomanes, and a third from my valuable friend Efcarano. The firf was for the fake of form ; but the two latter might be of the moft effential fervice, and were actually ufeful to me on feveral occafions. I likewife got myfelf introduced to the inquifitor-general, not merely to fatisfy a natural curiofity, but that, in cafe I fhould ftand in need of his protection, my name might not be altogether unknown to him.

Having adjufted all matters for my journey, previous to my departure, I enquired into the prices of provifions at Madrid, and found them to be as follow :

Bread, $6 \frac{\pi}{2}$ quarts per pound of 16 ounces;
Beef, - 14 ditto ditto;
Mutton, 15 ditto ditto.
A quart is $\frac{18}{64}$ of a penny, or a fmall fraction more than a farthing. Eight quarts ares equal to $2 \frac{\pi}{\tau}$ pence Englifh.

JOURNEY

MADRID To SEVILLE.
 OT. gegax mentat skit
$15^{\text {th }}$ February, 1787.
下T/HEN the day for our departure was arrived, we entered our coche de colleras, drawn by feven mules, and, paffing through Valdemoro, came to Aranjuez in the evening.

At Valdemoro, a town containing one thoufand nine hundred and thirty-eight fouls, with two convents, we found a royal manufactory of fockings, lately eftablifhed by the minifter of finance, to honour the place of his nativity. The frames are about one hundred, not all as yet employed. The ftockings are very weak, and badly woven; T 4 the the worfted is only of two threads, and not well fpun. In this manufacture, a good hand will earn twelve reals, or about $2 s .4 \frac{\pi}{2} d$. per day.

As the country was not new to me, my attention was chiefly occupied in reading my companions. With one of them, M. Seguier, a French captain in the Spanifh fervice, I was well acquainted, having met him often at the dukes de la Vauguion and Berwick. The two others were Colonel Davila, a native Spaniard, lately from Mexico, and a naval officer; the former going to Malaga, the latter to Cadiz. As thefe gentlemen had often travelled the fame road, they knew whềre to lay in provifions, and where to procure good wine; confequently we wanted nothing, that money could procure.

The inn at Aranjuez is upon a large fcale, making forty-four beds, all very clean and comfortable. It is royal property, and the king receives from it a rent of fifty-four thoufand reals, or $£ .540$ per annum.

The next day we paffed through Ocaña, a confiderable city, two leagues from Aranjuez, and nine from Madrid. It comprehends hends four parifhes, containing four thoufand eight hundred and eighty-fix fouls, and fupports ten convents. As it was too early to think of reft, we proceeded four leagues further, to La Guardia; and although it is not the ufual ftage, we found good accommodations. All the way from Madrid, the country is tolerably level ; the foil is fandy; the rock is gypfum; the produce chiefly corn, with fome vines and olives. Here, in the famous country of La Mancha, we naturally looked out for wind-mills, which, as they have no ftreams to grind their corn, we faw, as we expected, in the vicinity of every village. They have no oxen; and nothing but mules, or affes, are ufed for all the purpofes of hufbandry.

La Guardia was formerly a place of Atrength, and was long defended by the Moors; but now it appears to be verging to decay. It reckons fill about one thoufand families, confifting, according to the returns to government, of three thoufand three hundred and forty-four perfons; but, in fact, they have more than three thoufand who receive the facrament, and about eight hundred children under the communicating age. They have no manufecture except faltpetre, and that is not confiderable: hence their poverty and wretchednefs. Their lands are divided into fmall allotments, but the chief proprietor is Don Diego de Plata. The rents are paid in corn.

The church is a very handfome wellproportioned building; the aitars mofly new, and fimple. In one chapel are many good picures by Angelus Nardi. Th mot -a They have no beef. Mutton is twelve quarts, bread five quarts the pound of fixteen ounces.

After dinner we proceeded two leagues to fleep at Temblequie, a town of about two thoufand families, but reckoned to contain only four thoufand four hundred and eighteen fouls, with one parifh-church, one chapel, and one convent. The moft remarkable thing here is a manufacture of faltpetre, in which are employed forty men in winter, fixty in fummer, making fix thoufand arrobas every year. I found the manager more than commonly intelligent. He told me, that the expences, notwithftanding the moft rigid economy, amounted to fix hundred thoufand reals; that is, to about four reals, or nearly $9 \frac{1}{2} d$. per pound, of which, according to this fatement, the labour cofts no more than one penny; fo that the other eight pence halfpenny is for fewel, furnaces, management, intereft of capital, and other incidental charges. Should we carry this calculation with us to Madrid, how much beyond what I have already fated will appear to be the lofs on thofe extenfive works; where fewel is fo fcarce ! .obvt

He informed me, that he collected all his earth from fpots of ground, on which animal and vegetable fubftances had lain in a. ftate of putrefaction.

On Saturday, February-17th, we paffed through Gamuñas, a miferable village containing about three hundred cottages, to las Ventas de Puerto Lapiche, having in thefe three laft days travelled two and twenty leagues.

The country is flat, and the view to the north extenfive; but before we reached las Ventas, we had lof fight of the fnowy mountains, which feparate the two Caftilles. Under favourable circumfances of air and elevation, I think they muft be feen more than a hundred miles. The foil is a loofe fand of quartz, and the rock is granite. It is ploughed with two affes or two mules; and wherever it is watered by norias, produces plenty of corn. The wine is excellent, and in great abundance. The village of Lapiche is wretched; and the people appear half ftarved, although their crops can never be difappointed by the want of rain, for in the fpace of about fixty acres, I counted more than thirty norias.

- The Venta is in the old Spanifh file. It is one hundred and fifty feet in length, and, independent of a communicating fhed, or penthoufe, not more than ten feet wide. At one end is a chimney, by way of kitchen, ten feet fquare, with an hearth in the middle, furrounded on three fides by a bench, upon which the muletiers fit by day, and lie down to fleep by night; but by no means feparated from the long range of flables, that with primitive fimplicity, under one hofpitable roof, with a well in the middle of it, and at one end a penthoufe for carts and coaches. The bed-room is over the fable, and, according to cuftom, all night long we heard, or might have heard, the tinkling bells on the heads of our mules, at leart as long as they were feeding.

Et pecus et dominos communi clanderet umbra,
There is, adjoining to this, a court yard, with

Before we went to reft, we entered into treaty with the curate for early mafs. He ftood for fixteen reals; but at laft, on clofing the bargain, he agreed for eight. Had he perfifted in his demand, we muft have complied ; becaufe, to hear mafs on holidays in a catholic country, is indifpenfable, and it would not have been convenient for us to ftop upon the road.

From las Ventas we defcended into an extenfive plain, bounded by high hills on every fide, producing olives and corn, with faffron. At the end of eight leagues, we came to Manzanares. All the travellers on this road were well armed; and three monumental croffes proved that their fears were not ill founded. It was Sunday, yet many ploughs were working. Their crops are watered by numerous norias.

dred families, fix thoufand feven hundred and fixty-eight fouls, which proportion is itfelf a fufficient index of their poverty. The houfes are built with mud, and the poor are almort naked. In the church we faw four good pittures.

The Caftle, with a confiderable eftate, and the tithes, all belong to the knights of Calatrava, and are held by the infant don Antonio, yielding him a revenue of thirty thoufand ducats, or $f_{0} \cdot 3,295$ per annum. We examined the premifes, viewed the extenfive granaries, and tafted the rich variety of wines. The feward was fending fome to court, for the table of the infant, which appeared to me, without exception; the beft in Spain. It had the flavour of the richeft burgundy, with the Atrength and body of the moft generous poit. After praifing this wine, and thanking the fteward for his civilities̉, we purfued our walk till the clofe of day; when, at our return to the pofada, we had the happinefs of finding more than three gallons of this wine lodged there, and already depofited in our botas, or leather bottles, for the journey: Unfortunately, the two coachmen foon difcovered its peculiar excellence, and, by their afiftance, we finifhed in one day, what I had perfuaded myfelf would ferve us three.

The pofada is more comfortable, and upon a larger fcale than common, with two and thirty beds, all upon the ground floor. The building is about one hundred and eighty feet long, by thirty-fix or forty wide, with one long range through the middle for coach-houfe and ftable, from which the kitchen is fcarcely feparated by a partial fkreen. The bed-rooms to the right and left, are about fixteen feet by fourteen, each after the Spanif fahion, furnifed with four beds.

On Monday, Igth February, we left Manzanares early in the morning, palling through a level country to Valatenenas, at the diftance of four leagues, to dinner. The foil is fand with gravel, producing fome olives and much wine, but moftly corn. The norias are well confructed, with the great wheel of iron infead of wood.........The rock is fchint.
In the way we paffed two monumental croffes.

- Waldepeñas is famous for good wine, ?

which is fent chienty to Madrid; but whenever the navigation fhall be opened, as propofed, to Sevilie, this, with many other curious wines, the produce of La Mancha, will find its way to England, and will be in great requeft. In this town are feven thoufand fix hundred and fifty-one fouls.

From hence we paffed through Santa Cruz, and then began to afcend among rough uncultivated hills, till we took up our lodging at La Goncéption de Almuradiel. This little village, of thirty-fix families, is the firt we meet with in the new fettlements of the Sierra Morena. It was built A. D. ${ }_{17} 8 \mathrm{I}$.

The inn furrounds a court yard of ninety feet by fifty, with a coach-houfe adjoining, of one hundred and fifty feet by forty, and has ftables in proportion. The rooms are well fitted up, each with a chimney, and two alcoves for beds. Above thefe are the apartments of the adminiftrator, his deputy, and his fervants; with extenfive granaries, and a corridor, forming a communication around it. Every thing here is upon the king's account, and, of courfe, little atten+1

[ 289 ]

tion is paid to travellers. They gave me, for the firf time in Spain, dirty fheets; but, after fome remonftrances, the adminiftrator lent me a clean pair of his own.

Every fettler has ninety fenegas of land in empbiteufis, or as a copyhold, paying only the tithes to the king, and twelve quartos, or about three pence acknowledgment for the houfe.

Bread fells for eight quartos and an half a pound.
Ram mutton, ten quartos.
Beef they have none.
Wine is two quartos the quartillo, or about four pence ferling the gallon.

Santa Elena is peopled chiefly with Germans. In the vicinity we met with numerous cottages, not collected together, but fcattered over the country, according to the plan recommended by the Abbé Raynal; but they foon difcovered, what in this inftance he feems to have overlocked, that man is happier in fociety, and therefore gave up this mode of fettlement for villages.

The country is highly cultivated ; yet fo Vol. II. U many many trees are left, that the whole, at a little diftance, appears like an extenfive foreft.

They plough with cows, and make difo patch. In this part of Spain, and indeed all througt Andalucia and La Mancha, milk, butter and cheefe, appear to have no value, or at leaft it may be faid that in thofe provinces they have no dairies, and very feldom milk their cows. Gazpacho feems to fupply the place of buttermilk and whey among the peafants, who during the heat of fummer live chiefly on a mixture of bread, vinegar and oil. There can be no doubt that as the country improves in cultivation, they will learn to derive a profit from their mills.

In one cottage we faw tame partridges. Thefe are trained, like decoy ducks, to collect others.

In the higher regions of the Sierra we find the granite; but, as we defcend, the fchit again appears, with limeftone and gypfum.

At noon we came to Carolina, the capital of thefe new fettlements.

native of Peru, who, being protected by count d'Arania, was made at firt fyndic of ${ }^{3}$ Madrid, and aftervards aijhtente de Seriilia. Whilft in this employment, he conceived the idea of introducing agriculture and arts in the deferted mountains of the Sierra, where rapine and vioience had for ages eftablifhed their dominion. The dificulty was to procure fettiers. One Turrigel, of Bavaria, contracted for fix thoufand hufbandmen; but, inftead of men trained to agriculture, he brought only vagabonds, who all either died or were diíperied, without advancing the work for which, at an : immenfe expence, they had been brought.

Settlers were then invited from all parts of Germany, and, in order to encourage emigration from thofe hives, every new comer, on application, received a lot of land, a houfe, two cows, one aff, five fheep, as many goats, fix hens with a cock, one pregnant fow, a plough, and a pick-axe, with other emoluments of inferior value. They begin with fifty fanegas of land, of ten thoufand fquare feet each; and when they have cultivated thefe, they receive fifty more, free of all rent for the firft $t \in n$ years, and after that period, fubject only to the royal tithes. No proprietor can alienate his land to one who is in poffeffion of a lot, in order that the farms may never become either too little, or too big. They are not permitted to fettle, either near to a morafs or to ftagnant water.

- The foil about Carolina confifts chiefly of fand; and the rock is either limeftone or gyprum.

They produce olives, oil, wine, filk, wheat, barley, rye, oats, peas, Indian wheat, and lentils.

They have no manufactures, and therefore cannot profitably employ all their people. Hence it is, that thefe new fettlements fwarm with half naked beggars.

The numbers, at prefent fettled in the Sierra Morena, will appear from the government returns, and are as follows: unmarried men, two thoufand three hundred and eighty-eight; unmarried women, one thoufand feven hundred and twenty-four; married men, one thoufand fix hundred and twenty; married women, one thoufand fix hundred and nine ; widows, three hundred and eighteen; widowers, two hundred and nine; total feven thoufand eight hundred and fixty-eight. Of thefe, the hußbandmen are one thoufand feven hundred and eighty-four; day labourers, four hundred and eleven; artifans, one hundred and feventy-two; fervants, three hundred and fixty-fix; employed by the crown, one hundred and eighteen.

Confidering that all there were affembled and eftablifhed in lefs than ten years, we muft admire the energy and zeal of Olavidè. They have been collected, at a vaft expence, from diftant countries, and enjoy fingular immunities, yet the colony is far from profpering. The reafon of this muft be fought for, either in the climate, the foil, the government, the morals of the people, or in the want of a market for the furplus of their produce.

It is allowed that no country, if the climate is unhealthy, or if the foil is barren, if it wants corn and cattle, or if it is deftitute of fewel, can be populous; but, in the Sierra, excepting tertians, they are fubject to few difeafes; the foil is certainly productive both in fruits and herbage, and it abounds with wood. Suppofing the government of a country to be either weak or vicious, the peafant having no certainty of protection for his perfor and for his property, the moft fertile foil, notwithftanding repeated efforts to increafe its population, will be deferted. Or, fhould the morals be corrupt, the people will not increafe and multiply; the births will not fill up the vacancies made by death; and, to keep up the population, emigrants muft be invited from more prolific nations. But neither is it from there caufes that the Sierra languiihes, becaufe the people are felf governed, that is to fay, five villages unite to choofe a fenate for the adminiftration, both temporal and fpiritual; and as for luxury, with its attendant vices, it is yet unknown. We muft refer, therefore, to the want of a market, for the unprofperous condition of this new, this fequeftered colony.

The principles, thus briefly ftated, are confirmed by the experience of all nations. In favourable circumftances, a country, not fully peopled, will double its numbers at leaft every five and twenty years. Whenever, therefore, inftead of thus advancing, vancing, a defective population is at a ftand, or going backwards, we may be certain that, if fought for, fome of the caufes above fuggefted will be difcovered.

At Carolina we met with comfortable rooms in a pofada, which is kept by a Frenchman, and fared fumptuoully. It was February 20th, yet we had cauliflowers and green peas.

The people in this diftrict being fubject to agues, and to fuch intermittents, as, when neglected, foon turn putrid, I looked about for ftagnant water, and fc; marih miarma; but I could find none, and am therefore fatisfied, that thefe difeafes may arife from other caufes, befide thofe which have been commonly affigned.

Thus far the road through the Sierra is excellent; but all beyond is in a flate of nature.

About two leagues from Carolina is Guadaroman, a village comprifing one hundred families, each poffefing its fifty fanegas of land. It is fituated on a gentle declivity, by the fide of a purling brook, in a fertile fpot, which is chequered with corn fields and little groves of ilex. The diftant hills are beautifully varied in their forms, and covered with wood. The foil is fandy, and the trees are healthy; yet the inhabitants fuffer much by intermittent fevers.

[ 296 ]

They have no beef. Mutton is fevenreen quarts, or four pence three farthings the pound of two and thirty ounces; and bread is half that price.

The inhabitants are chiefly Germans, who, both by their induftry and frugality, do credit to their country.

As we increafe our diftance from this little colony, we lofe fight of every thing which marks the refidence of man; but, in approaching Eailen, we pafs through immenfe plantations of the olive, belonging, with that village, and a vaft extent of country round it, to the countefs of Penafiel. In the way we fee Baños, with its caftle, fituated on a hill, and commanding a diftant profpect. Having quitted Bailen, we entered a foreft, and at the top of a hill faw one monumental crofs; then, leaving $Z 0$ guega, with its convent, to the right, we came to the venta of Sequaca; and after dinner, dinner, fometimes travering extenfive forefts of the ilex, at others meeting with plantations of the olive, we came to Andujar.

The rock, wherever it is laid bare by torrents, appears to be hard granite, of different fpecies, both of the red and of the white.

Andujar is fituated in a rich and highly cultivated plain. It numbers fix thoufand eight hundred families, five parifh churches, and ten convents, but has no manufacture. The cafle carries the marks of great antiquity ; it was taken from the Moors, A. D. 1225, by Ferdinand III. furnamed $E l$ Santo.

- Thurfday, Februcry 22, at five in the morning, when we Jeft Andujar, after croffing the bridge over the Guadalquivir, and entering a plantation of olives, my companions each cocked his piftol, and held it to the window, whilft a foldier, with his gun, walked by our fide, and the coachmen were charged inftantly to ftop, if any one appeared. Thefe precautions, I apprehend, were needlefs, becaufe it was well known that we were armed; but as feveral rob-

beries had been committed near the city; they thought it right to be upon their guard. At break of day, as we advanced into a more open country, our apprehenfions vanifhed, and the piftols were uncocked.

All the hills we croffed, bounding the river to the north, are covered with fmooth, round, limeftone gravel, and fome flints; but in approaching to Del Carpio, the rock appears formed of filicious grit with mica, evidently from decompofed granite.

In Del Carpio are feven hundred and fifty houfes, with an old caftle, a poft-houfe, and a well built pofada.

As foon as we arrived, we paid our respects to the corregidor, and fhewed him our paffports, in order to fecure a good reception at our inn. The reafon of this precaution was, that one of our companions had formerly quarrelled with the good man of the inn, and had caufed him to be fent to prifon, for attempting to ftab him with a knife. The man kept out of fight, but his wife was determined to take revenge. It was little fhe could do; but all fhe could, the did, to teftify her refentment. For this this purpofe the affigned us a miferable room, with four mattreffes, each occupying its corner, and ftretched upon the floor. Fearing to be devoured by fleas, I chofe rather to fleep in our carriage: In the middle of the night the treading of a foot awakened my attention; and, as there was a lamp, I looked out to fee who was in motion. My fituation rendered me inviifble, and the light enabled me clearly to difcern every thing that paffed. The perfon who was moving was a muleteer, and his object was to fee what he could fteal. For this purpofe he examined the kitchen, then vifited the paffage communicating with the bed-rooms, and tried at every door, but finding them all faftened, he came to the coach; where feeing me, he fled back into the ftable, and hid himfelf.

Provifions here are cheap. They kill no mutton: beef, goat, and kid, are fixteen quarts a pound confifting of thirty-two ounces.

The land in the vicinity is rich. It belongs chiefly to the dutchefs of Alba, and her corregidor adminifters it for her. He appears to manage well. The plantations of olives are extenfive, and the trees are not, like thofe of the countefs of Penafiel round Bailen, worn out with age, but young and healthy.

[ 300 ]

As we draw nigh to Cordova, the higheft hills are covered with fiints and bowlder ftones, or large fmooth tumblers, of limeftone, filicious grit, and granite; and, as we approach the river, we difcover a bed of gravel, of all the above fpecies, twelve or fourteen feet in thicknefs.

Cordova is fituated in a plain of great extent, which is bounded on the fouth by fwelling hills cultivated to their very fummits, and on the north by a chain of rugged mountains, the continuation of the Sierra Morena. Through the midf of the plain runs the Guadalquivir; and the whole country being well wooded, well watered, and well cultivated, cannot be furpaffed either in riches or in beauty. Hère, for the firft time fince I left Barcelona, I rejoiced to find the fig, the orange, and the palm, in great abundance. It is a moft enchanting fpot.

fouls, fourteen parines, and forty-four convents.

The firft thing I did on my arrival, was to prefent myfilf before the intendant, with my letter from count Florida Blanca. He received me with politenefs, and preffed me to prolong my ftay; but, unfortunately, I had made engagements, and therefore proceeded the next day. All that I could do was to vifit the great church, and with this I was exceedingly delighted. Its numerous pillars, arranged in quincunx, appeared like a grove of faplings; and are faid to be eight hundred, but I had not time to count them, yet I hould conceive them to be many more. It was a mofque. The dimenfions are five hundred and ten feet, by four hundred and twenty.

I was flruck with the multitude of beggars in every ftreet; and, upon inquiry, foon found the caufe to be the mitaken benevolence of the biihop, of the canons, and of the convents, in diftributing alms to all who alls. The bifhopric is worth eighty thoufand five hundred ducats, or f. 8,843 pounds feriing, per annum. Out of this income the bifiop gives money every every day, alternately to the men and to the women, and on fome days he has relieved more than feven thoufand perfons. Befides pecuniary donations, he diftributes daily thirty fanegas of corn; yet, notwithstanding this more than ample provifion for the indolent and vicious, many are faid to have perifhed laft year for want of bread.

The chief difeafes are tertians and putrid fevers. Thefe arife from the quantity of cucumbers and melons they eat, not only in the fummer, but early in the fpring.

Provifions are, beef thirteen quarts the double pound, mutton fifteen, pork twentytwo, wine fix quarts the quartillo, or about one hilling the gallon. Labourers expect feven or eight reals a day, or, if they are victualled, only three.

Cordova had the honour of giving birth to Seneca and Lucan; and when Abdoulraman, after fubduing the fouth of Spain, had eftablifhed here the feat of his dominion, (A. D. 759), the fciences, with arts and arms, which were every where elfe abandoned, took up their refidence, and flourifhed in this city.

morning, we fet forwards on our journey, having joined another coach, which was going the fame road with four gentlemen weil armed. In travelling through Spain, I have conftantly obferved, that, wherever danger is apprehended, travellers affociate, and form fometimes confiderable bodies, yet without any communication, or verbal engagement for mutual defence, or any other bond of union befide their fears. Influenced by thefe alone, they unite their forces, and make a tacit agreement to fupport each other, or at leaf, by their numbers, to intimidate the thieves. One of our companions, the naval officer, not fatisfied with this reinforcement; in addition to the foldier, who attended our captain by way of a fervant and a guard, hired two marines. Thus efcorted, we proceeded with confidence, yet with circumfpection; thinking at leaft to have a view of the villains, who had been robbing on this road, but happily we faw nothing of them.

In traverfing the downs, I obferved on the fummit of the higheft hill, at the diftance of about two leagues from the Guadalquivir, the furface covered with large bowlder bowlder fones, of the fame fpecies with thofe already mentioned in the approach to Cordova. Such facts thould be treafured in the memory.

We came at noon to Cbarlotta, a new fettlement, and at prefent in its infancy, like thofe of the Sierra Morena. The country is beautiful, the foil rich, the herbage luxuriant, and the cxen large. In the pofada we had a French cook, and fared well. The price of provifions is here, beef eighteen quarts, mutton twenty, kid eighteen, bread eleven for a pound of thirty-two ounces, wine ten quarts the quartillo.

From hence, after dinner, we proceeded over the downs, admiring their extreme fertility, of which, in a few cultivated fpots, we were able to judge by the luxuriant crops of beans then in full bloffom. Thefe were well hoed. As we approached Ecija, the face of the country improved; cultivation appeared to be carried on with fpirit; the oxen became remarkable for beauty and for fize; and the plantations of olives fhewed the richnefs of the foll.

fore, with the fmooth tumblers above defcribed, prove to a demonftration that the whole country partook of the grand revolution, to which I have fo frequently rew ferred.

Ecija is eight leagues from Cordova. It is delightfully fituated on the banks of the Xenil, with pleafant walks, ferving, like thofe of the great cities in Spain, for the evening refort. It contains twenty-eight thoufand one hindred and feventy-fix fouls, and has fix parih churches, eight chapels, twenty convents, and fix hofpitals.

The churches, built entirely of brick, are fitted up in the old tafte, and crowded with pillars, which are loaded with preporterous ornaments, and covered with gold. The moft extravagant of all is the church of nueftra Señora del Rofario, in the convent of the Dominicans; this may ferve as a model for the perfection of vitiated tafte.

The Plaza Mayor is a fine object, very fpacious, and much to be admired for its balconies, occupying the whole front of the houfes.

When we arrived, we found every one engaged in talking over a defeat, which the
Vol. II. X king's

Eing's trcops had fuffered the preceding day from the fmugglers, near one hundred of whom, well armed, entering the city, had driven away the military, had kiled one man, and had then, unmolefted, fold their fnuff to the inhabitants. This violence was more than ufual, and proceeded from the bad policy of government, in raifing the price of tobacco from thirty to forty reals the pound, whiln the illicit trader purchafed the fame commodity in Portigal for eight. With fuch encouragement for defrauding the revenue, it will never be pofirble to prevent this trade; and whill men have fuch powerful inducements to violate the laws, no government, how frentious foever its exertions, and how cruel foever the punifment inficted on offenders, will ever be able to maintain a good police. In Spain, unfefs it be accompanied with nurder, the penalty for fmuggling is commonly a confinement for feven or ten years to hard labour in the preficios; where, by communication with profigate and hardened villins, who are under fmilar correction, they are prepared for the perpetration of the mont atrocious crimes; and, thus qualified, they are turned loofe

[ 307 ]

Loofe upon the public: Previous to this part of his education, the fmuggler feldom robs on the highway, unlefs when he has been plundered, and is therefore more than commonly diftreffed for want of horfes, of money, or of arms. In fuch circumftances he becomes outrageous, and frequently begins with murdering the tiaveller, whom he means to rob.

Farmers in this vicinity rent dear, paying commonly two buhhels of wheat and one of barley for every buthel of their feed; or if they pay a ftipulated fum of money, it is not immediately to the land-owner, but, as under-tenants, to rich land-jobbers; and therefore they can expect no moderation. Farms, if inclofed, let much higher than thofe which are open, becaufe the latter are liable to be fed by the Merino fheep; whereas, hould they enter the former, onefifth of the number trefpaffing would be forfeited. This, however, proves a neverfailing fource of quarrels and contentions between the occupiers of land and thofe, who may be called graziers, that is, the proprietors of the Merino flock, who, under the fanction of a peculiar code, claim $\mathrm{X}_{2}$ the the privilege of feeding, not only in the common pafture, but even in plantations of olives. The murders confequent on thefe quarrels have been more than two hundred in the fpace of a few years; and the litigations have coft the contending parties more than the value, both of their fheep and of their olives. The council of Cattille interfered, in the year 1570 , to prohibit this; but the great fheep-mafters appeal to their own courts, plead their privilege, as granted by the Mefta code, and fupport their claim by force.

Throughout the whole province of Andalufia, cities and boroughs have immenfe poffeffions, in many inftances extending to the diftance of three leagues from them every way, including thus more than two hundred thoufand acres, either of wafte land, or of fuch as might be cultivated, if it were not too remote from the habitation of the farmer. Of thefe, not one-fourth part is broken up by the plough; and that, which remains uncultivated, rather checks than promotes the breed of cattle. In fhort, according to the opinion of the beft patriots in Spain, Andalufia is ruined by high rents,

February 25. At five in the morning, we left Ecija, and followed the Roman caufeway leading from Cordova to Seville, till we came to Carmona. The country through which we paffed belongs to the crown, and will be improved as faft as emigrants can be induced to come. At prefent little is cultivated, and that little, bears the face of wretchednefs, exhibiting ruined cottages, and half-naked peafants. We converfed with a Frenchman, who had heen here eighteen years, and during that period had been often removed from his plantation, becaufe, by his diligence and fkill, he had improved his allotment, which being given to flovens, he was compelled to take new land. It is true they always gave him, what they confidered as an equivalent, not intending to injure him, but meaning only to avail themfelves of his fuperior application and abilities; yet, in the end, they reduced him to poverty, and broke his fpirit. This, he informed us, was no uncommon cafe; and, from the mifery every where vifible in $\mathrm{X}_{3}$ thefe thefe new colonies, I am inclined to credit his report.

[ 310 ]

The botanical productions are chiefly the ilex, the myrtle, the gum cinus, the lavender, a fpecies of the Daphne, and a plant called lentifcus.

Carmona is built on a declivity, looking down upon a rich valley, which is bounded by diftant hills, excepting only to the fouth, where a wide opening gives paffage to the Guadalquivir.

It contains twelve thoufand fix hundred and eighty-five fouls, and includes feven parifh churches, with five convents for men, two for women, and two hoipitals. Here they reckon more than a hundred oil-mills.

As foon as we arrived, alchough the fun was fet, I took hories, and went off for Seville, that I might have a comfortable bed. The difance is fix leagues, or about twenty miles, and the charge was one hundred and twenty reals, or four-and-twenty- hillings, including the licence, which muf always be taken out, when you begin a journey with poft hories.

It being dark, I could not fee the country, but I found that it was level, that the foil was fandy, and, by the incefiant cratsing of frogs, I concluded that every ditcin was fuil of fagnant water.

At ten in the evening I arrived at Seville, well contented with my horfes, having travelled the fix leagues in little more than two hours. Indeed, no horfes can move more pleafantly, than thofe of AndaIufia, cantering the whole way, without needing either whip or fpur. I took up my lodging at the pofada de la. Baviere, and flept more comfortably than I had done fince we left Madrid.

THE morning after my arrival I examined my letters. Among the perfons of diftinction and authority, to whom I was recommended, I judged, as an ecclefiaftic, my firft attention to be due to the archbiihop, and therefore I haftened early to his palace. He received me with politenefs, permitted me to kifs his ring, made me fit down, and then, having read my letter, he told me, that as long as I continued at Seville I muft dine every day with him, unlefs when I fhould be more agreeably engaged. After fome little converfation, he defired to fee the addrefs of my other letters, and calling a page, he ordered that a coach fhould be got ready, and that one of his chaplains fhould attend me, to deliver my letters, and to fhew me every thing worthy of attention in the city. When I left hims he defired me to come back to dinner, telling me, that during my itay, that coach would be wholly at my fervice. Agreeable to this invitation I returned, and not only dined with him that day, but almof every day during a fortnight's refidence at Seville. I was indeed often preffingly invited by other families; but, as it was the feafon of lent, and as fifh, in Spain, never agreed with me, I declined their invitations. At the archbifhop's table were many aged perfons, who were fuppofed to be infirm, and therefore for them were provided a variety of difhes, fuch as others did not feel themfelves at liberty to touch. To this circumflance I reckon myfelf indebted for returning health; becaufe, for want of cuftom, and in a weakly condition at the time, I fhould never have been able to endure a faft, which, with the exception of the intervening fabbaths, is in fact, although not by precept, a faft of forty days.

The archbinop is well lodged, and keeps a hofpitable table. He is quite the man of fathion: his manners are engaging, and his converfation lively. His ufual company at dinner was his confefor, his chaplains, his fecretaries, and a few friends. He was attended by his pages, who are generally young men of family, recommended to his patronage, and educated under his infpection. The librarian fometimes fat down at the table, at other times waited behind a chair. He was commonly my guide, and with him I vifited every corner of the city.

Seville ftands on the banks of the Guadalquivir, in the midft of a rich, and, to the eye, a boundlefs plain. It is furrounded by a wall of more than a league in circumference, with one hundred and feventy-fix towers. Over one of the gates is the foln lowing infcription :

Condidit Alcides, renovavit Julius Urbem, Reftituit Chrifo Fernandus Tertius, Heros,

Which, over another gate, is thus tranfo lated:

> Hercules me edifico;
> Julio Cefar me cercò
> De Muros y torres altas;
> Y et Rey fanto me gano
> Con Garci Perez de Vargas.

The

The ftreats are narrow, and fome of them fo contracted, that you may touch both walls at the fame time. Few are wide enough for carriages; and many, through which coaches pafs, fhew, by the deep furrows in the walls, that one nave touched, and often both at the fame time.

Sevilie is faid to contain eighty thoufand two hundred and fuxty-eight fouls, and is divided into thirey patimes. It has eightyfour convents, with twenty-four hofpitals.

Of the public edifices, the firt to demand attertion is the cathedral, a building of fingular magnificence, bat admired chiefly for its tower, the work of Giiever, the Moor. He made it originally two hundred and fifty feet high, but A. D. 1568 , it was raifed one hundred more, and is therefore, at prefent, three hundred and fifty feet. It has no feps, nor are they wanted; becaufe the inclined plain is fo eafy of afcent, that a horfe might trot from the bottom to the top; at the fame time it is fo fpacious, that two horfemen may ride abreait. On the top of this tower is the Giralda, or large brazen image, which, with its palm-branch, weighs near one ton and an half, yet turns with the flightef variation of the wind.

The dimenfions of the cathedral are four hundred and twenty feet, by two hundred and fixty-three; and the height is one hundred and twenty-fix. It was built A. D. 1401. It receives light by fourfcore windows with painted glafs, the work of Arnao of Flanders, each of which coft one thoufand ducats.

The treafures of this church are ineftimable : one altar is wholly filver, with all its ornaments, as are the images, large as life, of S. Ifidore and S. Leander, and a cuftodia or tabernacle for the hoft, more than four yards high, adorned with eight and forty columns; yet thefe are trifling in value, when compared with the gold and precious. ftones depofited by the piety and zeal of catholics, during the period in which all the wealth of a newiy-difcovered world flowed into this city. The profufion of goid, of filver, and of gems, would be more friking, were not the attention occupied and loft in admiration of innumerable pictures, the works of thofe Spanih mafters mafters who flourihed, immediately after the revival of the art, in Seville. Every chapel preferves fome monuments of their fuperior fk ill. Of thefe, the moft confpicuous are of Luis de Vargas, and of Fr. Zurbaran, but chiefly of Murillo. By the laft is a Nativity in the chapel of the Conception, and, near the baptifmal font, S. Anthony of Padua, with the Baptifm of Chrift. In the principal facrifty, are his much-admired pictures of $S$. Ifidore, with his brother S. Leander; and in another facrifty, his Holy Family, with an Ecce homo by Morales. The chapter-houfe is wholly devoted to Murillo, and the chapel of S. Peter is given up to Zurbaran. The works of Luis de Vargas are difperfed in various places; but his famous picture, called de la Gamba, is in a chapel near the gate of S . Chriftopher, and merits particular attention.

To the cathedral belongs a library of twenty thoufand volumes, collected by Hernando, fon to Chriftobal Colon, the firft difcoverer of America, a man of tafte, and much admired in his day for learning. It is to be lamented, that modern publications have not been added to complete, what was fo well begun by him.

I was much pleafed with the conftruction of a new organ, containg five thoufand three hundred pipes, with one hundred and ten Rops, which latter, as the builder told me, is fifty more then are in the famóus one of Harlem ; : yet, fo ample are the bellows, that, when fretched, they fupply the full organ fifteen minutes. The mode of filling them with air is fingular ; for inftead of working with his hands, a man walks backwards and forwards along an inclined plain of about fifteen feet in length, which is balanced in the middle on its axis; under each end is a pair of bellows, of about fix feet by three and an half. Thefe communicate with five other pair united by a bar; and the later are fo contrived, that when they are in danger of being overftrain cd, a valve is lifted up, and gives them relief. Paffing ten times along the inclined plain fills ail thefe veffuls.

In the cathedral are eighty-two altars, at which are facd daily five hundred maffes. The annual confumption is fifteen hundred arrobas of wine, eight hundred of oil, and of wax about one thoufand.

The wealth belonging to this chapter may be eftimated by the numbers that are fupported by it.

The archbifhop, with a revenue of three huindred thoufand ducats; or, in ferling, neatly thirty-three thoufand pounds a year.

Eleven diguitaries, who wear the mitre on high fefivals, amply, but not equally, provided for.

Forty canons of forty thoufand reals, or about four hundred pounds each, per annum.

Twenty prebendaries, with an income of thirty thoufand reals each.

Twenty-one minor canons, at twenty thoufand reals each.

Befide thefe, they have twenty chanters, called Veinteneros, with three afifitants, called Sochantrès, two beadles, one mafter of the ceremonies, with a deputy, three attendants to call the roll and mark the abfentees, thirty-fix boys for finging and for the fervice of the altar, with their rector, vice refor, and mufic mafters; nineteen chaplains, chaplainś, four curates, four confefôtrs, twenty-three muficians, and four fupernus meraries ; in all, two hundred and thittyfive.

Many of the convents are rematkable for the beauty of their architecture; but, in Seville, the eye covets only pictures, and amidft the profufion of thefe, it overlooks works, which, in other fituations, would rivet the attention, and every where fixes on the pencil of Murillo. His moft famous performances are in the Hofpital de la Caridad, and, fuited to the inftitution, exprefs fome act of charity; fuch as, the miracle of the Loaves and Fifhes; the Smiting of the Rock in Horeb; the Pool of Betherda; the Reception of the returning Prodigal; Abraham addreffing the three angels, and preffing them to enter his habitation; the Deliverance of Peter from the Prifon; and Charity, in the perfon of Elizabeth, wafhing the wounds and curing the difeafes of the poor. Befide there, in the fame hofpital, is the Annunciation of the bleffed Virgin; and two little pi¿tures, the one of the infant Jefus, the other of John.

The church of the Capuchins is richly

[ $3^{21}$ ]

furnifhed with his works; and, although in thefe the compofition is more fimple than in the former, yet they may be confidered as fome of the beft of his productions. Eleven of his pictures are to be feen in a chapel called de la vera Cruz, belonging to the Francifcans. Thefe do much credit to his pencil; and, not inferior to them, are many preferved in other convents; fuch as, an Ecce homo, and the bleffed Virgin, with the infant Jefus, in the church of the Carmelites; the Flight into Egypt, in that of la Merced Calzada; a rich variety of fubjects in S. Maria de la blanca; and S. Auguftin writing, with $S$. Thomas of Villanueva, ftripping himfelf to clothe the poor, in the convent of the Augutin friars, near the gate of Carmona. In my opinion, the moft mafterly of all his works is in the refectory of an hofpital defigned for the reception of fuperannuated priefts. It reprefents an angel holding a bafket to the infant Jefus, who, ftanding on his mother's lap, takes bread from it to feed three venerable priefts. No reprefentation ever approached nearer to real life, nor is it poffible to fee more expreffion, than glows upon Vol, II. Y that that canvafs. In the parochial church of Santa Cruz, are two pictures in a fuperior frile, a Stabat Mater dolorofa, which excels in grace and foftnefs; and the famous Defcent from the Crofs, of Pedro de Campaña, which Murillo was accuftomed daily to admire, and oppofite to which, by his own directions, he was buried.

This great painter was born A. D. 1618 , and died in 1682 .

His name ftands high in Europe; but to form an adequate idea of his excellence, every convent hould be vifited, where he depofited the monuments of his fuperior fkill.

In exactnefs of imitation he was equalled; in clara obfcuro, and in reflected lights, he was furpaffed by Velazquez; but not one of all the Spanifh artifts went beyond him in tendernefs and foftnefs.

In vifiting the convents, and in viewing their pictures, I had the happinefs to have for my guide D. Francifco de Bruna, a gentleman diftinguifhed for his judgment and his tafte, who had ftudied the peculiar excellence of every mafter, and was perfectly acquainted with the merit of each work. He has himfelf a well-difpofed collection of the beft Spanifh painters, natives of Seville, or educated there; fuch as, 'Luis de Vargas, Velazquez, Zurbaran, Valdez, and Murillo, befide many of the Italian and of the Fleminh fchools.

The houre in which they are depofited, and in which he lives, was once the refidence of Mooriih kings, and, as fuch, was called Alcazar. It is an irregular building, but commodious and pleafantly fituated, comprifing many large and well-proportioned rooms. But, as it is fufficiently defcribed by travellers, I fhall not add to their defcriptions. The garden is fingular, and, having retained its priftine form, it is meant to ferve as a model of the Moorin tafte. It is laid out in alleys, with clipped myrtle hedges, and in the middle of the parterres are fingle trees cut into the form of warriors, with fpiked clubs. Its principal fruits are oranges and lemons. The whole of this pleafure-garden, together with the palace and the court-yard, is furrounded by a ftrong rampart, communicating with, but much higher than, the city wall; and beyond this is an orange-grove of confiderable extent.

For the winter and for the fpring, there cannot be a more delightful refidence.

In feaking of pictures, I have confined myfelf chiefly to Murillo, becaufe of his fuperior excellence, and becaufe Seville, the place of his nativity, may be confidered as the principal depofitory of his work. But although eminent, he by no means ftands alone. This once famous fchool, in which the art revived at the beginning of the fixteenth century, when firft the treafures of the weftern continent were brought to Se ville, has produced a multitude of good painters. Among thefe, ftand foremoft Pedro de Villegas, the father of this fchool, Luis de Vargas, Velazquez, Herrera, Roelas, Juan de el Caftillo, Zurbaran, Francifco Pacheco, Alonfo Cano, and Valdez, with many others univerfally admired.

The works of thefe great mafters, and of various foreigners, as well as of native Spaniards, are to be met with, not only in the churches, but in the houfes of the principal inhabitants. Among thefe, I vifited the collections of the marquis of Mofcofo, of D. Pedro de Caftro, and of D. Donato de Arenzana. In the poffeffion of the latter is, perhaps, haps, the moft perfect reprefentation that was ever painted upon, canvafs: it is a lamb, by Zurbaran, with which Velazquez was fo much fruck, that he rook the pains to copy it. This I had feen in the poffieffion of D. Fr. de Bruna; but when I had viewed the original, the copy, much as I had before admired it, funk in my eftimation. D. Donato has, befide this, a good head by Morales, a Conception by Guido, a moft incomparable portrait of S. Ignatius Loyola by Careño; the Defcent from the Crofs by Luis de Vargas, and the Death of Abel by Bobadilla.

Of the convents, that which is upon the moft extenfive fcale belongs to the Francifcans. It contains fifteen cloifters, many of which are elegant and fpacious, with apartments for two hundred monks; but at prefent they have only one hundred and forty in their community. Thefe, like all of their order, are fed by charity, and are much favoured by the people. Their annual expenditure is more than four hundred thoufand reals, or in fterling about four thoufand pounds, amounting to twenty-eight pounds eleven fhillings and five pence for each. But then out of this muft be deducted the expence of wine, oil, and wax, with the alms diftributed daily to the poor, which ail together is confiderable.

Not one of the convents is equally frequented as this, more efpecially during the forty days of Lent. In the principal cloifter, which is intirely inclofed by a multitude of little chapels, are reprefented, in fourteen pictures, each called a fation, all the fufferings of the Redeemer. Thefe are fo arranged as to mark given ditances by walking round the cloifter from the firt to the fecond, and fo in order to the reft. Over them is mentioned the number of fteps taken by our Lord between the feveral incidents of his pafion in his way to Calvary, and thefe precifely are the paces meafured for the penitents in their progrefs from one fation to another. Over one is the following infcription: "This ftation ${ }^{66}$ confifts of 1,087 fteps. Here the bleffed "Redeemer fell a fecond time under the " weight of his crofs, and here is to be " gained the indulgence of feven years and "forty quarantines. Mental prayer, the "Paternofter and the Ave Maria." This may ferve as an example for the rè̀. I obferved men, women, and children, rich and poor, going their rounds, fome folitary, others in little groups, repeating aloud their Latin prayers, and kneeling at every fation in regular fucceffion.

Among all the hofpitals I was moft pleafed with that of la Sangre, defigned for the reception of female patients. The front is elegant, and the fculpture is much to be admired, more efpecially the three figures of Faith, Hope, and Charity. The wards are fpacious, and the whole is remarkable for neatnefs.

Were I inclined to enlarge in my defcriptions of the public buildings, the Torre del Oro, the Plaza de Toros, the Aqueduct with its four hundred and ten arches, but more efpecially the Exchange, would afford me ample fcope. The latter, planned by Herrera (A. D. 1598 ,) and worthy of its great architect, is a quadrangle of two hundred feet, with a corridor or fpacious gallery round it, adorned with Ionic columns, and fupported by an equal number of Doric.

The univerity was founded in the year 1502 , and foon rofe into confideration. The name of Arias Montanus, who lies buried at the convent of S . Jago, is alone fufficient to give celebrity to this feminary. His. tranflation of the holy Scriptures will be valued by the learned, as long as the Scriptures themfelves thall be the objects of veneration to mankind. The number of under-graduates here is about five hundred.

We meet at Seville with the favourite infitutions of Count Campomanes, his academy for the three noble arts of painting, fculpture, and architecture, and his œconomical fociety of the friends of their country. Both thefe haye been attended with fuccefs, and have given affiftance not only to the arts, but to agriculture, to manufactures, and to commerce. About two hundred pupils attend the former.

The principal manufacture is fnuff. To this I paid particular attention. The edifice, elegant and fimple in its form, is about fix hundred feet by four hundred and eighty, and not lers than fixty feet in height, with four regular fronts, inclofing twenty-eight quadrangles. It coft thirty-feven millions of reals, or about three hundred and feventy thoufand pounds. At preent, no more than than feyenteen hundred workmen are employed, and one hundred horfes or mules; but formerly, three thoufand men were engaged, and near four hundred horfes. This falling off is attributed to mifmanagement, and to the reluctance with which they confented to deftroy their damaged tobacco. They have now changed this fyftem; and, not many days before my arrival, they condemned to the flames fifteen thoufand pounds weight as unfit for ufe. Yet the high price of the commodity reftrains the fale; for, fince they raifed the tobacco from thirty to forty reals, that is, from about fix to eight hillings a pound, the demand has gradually leffened. From the year 1780 , the annual fale has been, of tobacco from Brazil, one million five hundred thoufand pounds, purchafed from the Portuguefe, at three reals a pound; and of fnuff, from the produce of their own colonies, one million fix hundred thoufand pounds, befide cigars to a very confiderable amount. They have lying by them, more than five millions of fnuff unfold; but, as it will not fuffer by age, they are not uneafy at this accumulation. Befide the peculiar kind of fnuff, with which Spain was accuftomed to fupply the market, they have lately introduced the manufacture of rappee. There was a neceffity for this, in order to put a ftop to an illicit trade; for whill the king was felling at fixty, and fometimes at fourfcore reals a pound, the fmugglers fold the fame commodity at forty, having themfelves purchafed it in France, from the farmers of tobacco, at fifteen; but, now that government fells good rappee.at twenty-four reals, the fmuggler's profit will not compenfate for the rifk. In this branch alone are employed, at prefent, two hundred and twenty people, old and young, with fixteen mules; but they mean to pufh their trade, when they can get a fufficient quantity of tobacco, and to engage five times as many hands. The operations are fo numerous before the rappee is fit for market, that they require a multitude of workmen. Whilf fome are employed to unbind the little bundles of tobacco, others are occupied in picking the leafy fubftance from the hard ftems. Some are engàged in dying, others either in ftraining and prefing, or in fpinning the leaf into ropes, and winding it up into roliers to be faggoted and preffed, till a parcel of eighteen inches long, and two and an half inches in diameter, will weigh fix pounds. Thefe operations being finifhed, it is laid in heaps to fweat nine months; after which, it is cut and fifted, then grated, once more fifted, and finally packed up in canifters for fale.

[ 330 ]

All the workmen depofit their cloaks at the door, and, when they go out, are fo ftrictly examined, that they have little chance of being able to conceal tobacco; yet they fometimes venture to hide it about their perfons. An officer and a guard is always attending to take delinquents into cuftody; and, that they may prevent refiftance, no workman is permitted to enter with a knife. Were it not for this precaution, the confequence of a detection might be fatal.

The whole bufinefs is conducted by a director, with a falary of forty thoufand reals a year, and fifty-four fuperior officers, affifted by as many fubordinate to them. 3 ,35y

For grinding their fnuff, they have forty mills, each confifing of a ftone-roller, moved by a large horfe, or mule, with the traces traces faftened to a beam of eight feet in length, in the angle of forty-five degrees, confequently lofing precifely half his force. I endeavoured to explain this to the officer who conducted me through the works, but he could not comprehend it. He is brother to the unfortunate young woman, who, in the year 1774, at S. Lucar, bled before the altar, a victim to the unhallowed paffion, with which her beauty had infpired the prieft. This wretch, whilft receiving her confeffions, had declared himfelf her lover; but, at laft, enraged at the obflinate refiftance of a virtuous mind, he turned his back upon the altar, where he had been partaking of the confecrated bread, and ftabbed her, in the prefence of her mother. For this moft atrocious of all crimes, he was fhocking to relate !-fuffered to live in banifhment at Porto Rico.

The filk manufacture was formerly confiderable in Seville. When Ferdinand III. furnamed el Santo, (in the year 1248) entered the city, he found, as it is faid, fixteen thoufand looms, which employed a hundred and thirty thoufand perfons; and fuch was the population of the city, that the Moors,

[ 333 ]

Moors, who left it when it was furrendered to the Chriftians, were four hundred thoufand, befide multitudes who died during a fixteen months fiege, and many who remained after their fellow citizens were gone. estary sume

Alfonzo, furnamed el Sabio, feeing the importance of this manufacture, gave it every pofirble encouragement; and, trade being chiefly confined to Seville, on the firft difcovery of America; (A. D. 1519 ,) they once more reckoned fixteen thoufand looms; but the millones, impofed at the latter end of the reign of Philip II. to defray the expence of his wars, gave a fhock to commerce, and the frequent alteration in the relative value of their money, with the expulfion of the Moors, almoft ruined this once wealthy city. Added to this, in the year I 649 more than two hundred thoufand perfons died of an epidemical difeafe in Spain. In confequence of thefe misfortunes, (A. D. 1655 , there remained only fixty looms in Seville. After the acceffion of a new family, the weavers amounted (A. D. 1713 ,) to four hundred and five: but in the year 1721, the farmers of the tax on filk having collected with rigour the fourteen per cent. for the alcavala and cientos, they not only ruined the manufacture, but reduced the revenue from eight hundred thoufand reals to lefs than fixteen thoufand. Philip, however, giving attention to this important bufinefs, trade revived, and (A. D. 1732) the looms amounted to one thoufand. War with England reduced them fuddenly, and A. D. 1739 they were only a hundred and forty. Since the remonftrances of Bernardo de Ulloa, (A. D. 1740) the taxes have no longer been left to the rapacity of farmers, the alcavala has been taken off; and, by the laft account, the looms amounted to four hundred and fixty-two for wide filks, with one thoufand eight hundred and fifty-fix for other purpofes. Each loom is allowed annually, if for wide work, a hundred pounds of filk duty free ; if for narrow, they receive fourfcore.

The art of tanning is perhaps no where fo ill conducted as in Spain; in no part of which can good leather be procured, unlefs it come from England. Senfible of this, the miniter of finance became anxious to induce fome Atranger, fkilful in the bufinefs, to take up his refidence in Spain. Whilft he had this idea in his mind, chance threw in his way a tradefman travelling to receive orders, and to get in debts for himfelf and partners, who, as leather-cutters, have a fhop on Snow-hill, in London. It immediately occurred to the minifter, that he had found his man; and therefore, fending for him, without lofs of time, he invited him to fettle as a currier and a tanner. This gentleman, confcious to himfelf that he was not properly qualified to conduct a bufinefs, to which he had not been bred, withfood his folicitations, and refufed the moft advantageous terms: but at length, after confidering the matter in every point of view, he accepted the offer, and cons fented to eftablifh himfelf at Seville: I vifited his tan-yard, and found him happy in the protection he enjoys. The minifter has given him the convent of the Jefuits, and about feven acres of good land, fent free, with the pre-emption of hides from Buenos Ayres, and of all ikins from the Spanifh fettlements; befide the privilege of cutting down, for bark, all the trees growing, either in the royal forefts, or on the lands of private perfons, within a given diffance of the city. He ufes the inner bark taken from the cork-tree, with myrtlè leaves, which ferve his purpofe tolerably well; yet are by no means equal in ftrength to the bark of oak. He fays, that the Spaniards underftand the art of tanning; but that they want fpirit, induftry, and capital for fuch extenfive undertakings; and I am inclined to think, that his obfervation is well founded. Finding him a man of activity, with a command of money, the minifter has given him a contract to furnih boots and belts for the cavalry, and a variety of other articles, fuch as fpurs and buckles, not connected with his peculiar trade. He is certainly a treafure to the Spaniards, both for application and for weight of capital, and, $\bar{I}$ have no doubt, will purh this new eftablifhment as far as it can go, provided government fhall continue to proted him.

Having been introduced to D. Juan Alvarez, the intendant of the mint, I vifited his office, in which at prefent a few workmen find occafional employment; whereas formerly one hundred and eighty were conftantly engaged. They have here the fame Now procefs as at London and in Paris, in confequence of which their coinage is expenfive; whilf in Birmingham the operation, by a new invention, is expedited, and performed at a trifling expence.

In traverfing the ftreets, I was ftruck with the multitude of beggars clothed in rags; and was at firft inclined to attribute this to the decay of trade; but, upon examination, I found a more abiding caufe in the diftribution of alms at the archbifhop's palace, and at the gates of twenty convents, daily, and without diftinction, to all who make application for relief. Such mifplaced benevolence is a bar to indufry, and Vor. II. $Z$ multiplies multiplies the objects of diffeef, whofe numbers bear exact proportion to the provifion made for their fupport. To have this principle rightly underftood is of fuch importance, that I can never let one opportunity efcape of bringing it into view.

iMy time paffed away pleafantly at Seville. The mornings I employed in viewing whatever was mof worthy of attention in the city, or in little excurfions to the country. At noon I paid my refpects to the good archbihop, dined and took the Siefta at his palace; after which I fometimes went out in the carriage with his grace, at other times joined the company in the Alameda, or public walk; and clofed the day either with the archbilhop, or in the family of fome cheerful friend. The feafon of Lent is not favourable to gaiety, becaufe it does not admit of the ufual diverfions; yet $I$ had always reafon to be fàtisfied with my evening's entertainment. The archbihop received only gentlemen - for converfation. In other houfes they have generally fome round game at cards; but the family, in which I delighted moft, was that of a canon, for whofe fifter I had the the honour to be confuted as a phyficiañ The cafe was highly interefting; an epilepfy, arifing from extreme fenfibility ; and I pleaded myself with the idea, that I was ufeful to her. My recompence was to enjoy her converfation, and to hear her fling.

In one of my morning vifits at the archbishop's palace, I had the fatisfaction of being present at an oppofition, or difputaton, between the candidates for a vacant benefice; a fcene admirably defcribed, by the author of Gil Blas. Vehemence, on fuch an occafion, is not only fanctioned by cuftom, but is certainly excufable, in men who are contending, not merely for fame, but bread. The judges are the diocesan, affifted by fix of the chapter; and the examinations are in the fciences, ethics, devinite, and canon law: Many ecclefiaftical preferments are difpofed of in this way. Thus in every cathedral four canons are chofen by opposition, and are fid to be de merits; thee are, the penitentiary, for receiving the confeffions of the chapter; the preacher; the profeifor of theology; and the civilian, who conducts their law-hits. The ref are given through favour, either.

by the diocefan, the chapter, or the king, according to the month in which the vacancy happens.

When a candidate makes application to the great, either for protection in general, or upon a fpecial occafion for preferment, he prefents a printed copy of his memorial, ftiled " Relacion de los Meritos, titulos, grados $y$ exercicios, literarios de $A$. B." of which the original is lodged with the fecretary of fate, and contains his name; the place of his nativity; his rank; his age; the univerfity, in which he fudied, with the degrees he has taken; his acquirements; his conduct in his profeffion, as a prieft, as a preacher, and as a confeffor; fetting forth his regularity, his zeal, and his fuccefs, with his peculiar privileges, fuch as that he is permitted to read the prohibited books, and to confers both fexes; and ftating, finally, that he is every way qualified to receive any ecclefiaftical preferment to which he may be prefented.

One day, when I was at the archbifhop's palace, the old librarian took me afide, and requefted me to make application for him to obtain a living then vacant, and in the gift of the crown, defiring me to write immediately to count Florida Blanca, and to inclofe his Relacion de meritos. This, I remember, ftated, in the lift of his acquirements, that he had learnt Hebrew, that he had been. examined in the verbs, but that he had never been rich enough to purchafe a lexicon. I made the application through our minifter, and obtained the promife of a living for him; but not that for which he then folicited.

Not far from the city is a building, now verging to decay, near to which I often paffed, without alking for what it was defigned; but, one evening, walking with the gentleman to whom I had been recommended by count Florida Blanca, ftruck with its form, I defired him to tell me what purpofe it had feryed. At firft he feemed to pay no attention; but, upon my repeating the queftion, I received an evafive anfwer, fuch as tended only to awaken my curiofity, and to make me more urgent with him for information. At laft he told me, that this ftrange kind of edifice is called el $2 u e-$ madero; but begged that I would never difclofe to any one, from whom I had received my information. The name was fufficient, together with the form, without further $\mathbb{Z}_{3}$ inquiries, inquiries, to explain the horrid ufe to which it had been too often put. I urged him no further on the fubject; and, without lofs, of time, haftened from a fot which my imagination painted all in flames. The next day, howeyer, I returned with one of the judges, who, as fuch, could venture to be more communicative. In anfwer to my queftions, he informed me, that the 2uemadero, fo called from the verb quemar, to burn, ferved the purpofe of a fcaffold for burning heretics; and that, about four years before, a woman had fuffered on it, by a fentence of the inquifition, to which he had given his fanttion. From him, and from others, I obtained the following particulars. This woman was à beata, profeffing one of the three vows impofed on nuns, of which, poverty and obedience are the regular companions; yet that vow the broke. In the accufation fhe was charged with having corrupted her confeffor ; who, poor man ! às the leaft culpable of the two, was merely banifhed. Had this been her fole offence, it had been punifhed with lels diftinguifhed feverity; bui, not fatisfied with having been guilty of facrilege in one inftance ${ }_{3}$

inftance, fhe went on corrupting the priefthood; and, either from paffion or from vanity, extended daily, over the fervants of the altar, the dominion of her charms; till, either by pride, or by remorfe of confcience, The loft her underftanding, and foolinhly imagined that the was acting under a divine authority. Some fay, that fhe vindicated her conduct upon the principle, that both parties were free from obligation; but others, and more juftly, fay, that fhe pretended to have feen an angel. This being a crime within the cognizance of the inquifitors, the was brought to trial, was convicted, and was burnt.

Excited by this narration, I had the curiofity to vifit the court of the inquifition. It was formerly a convent of the Jefuits, and is fo light and elegant, that I could fcarcely conceive it to contain the dreadful tribunal and gloomy dungeons. I went into the chapel, and the hall of judgment, and ventured to afk fome queftions; but could obtain no anfwer: filence and folitude feemed to have eftablifhed their dominion there.

than it was in darker ages, when fuperftition reigned; and the inquifitors of the prefent day, if not more humane, are at leaft more humble, than their predeceffors in remoter periods. Yet we muft confefs, that, whilf their authority remains, it will be ever fubject to abufe. Every one knows the hiftory and the fate of Don Pablo Olavidé. The real caufe of his difgrace, was neither his impiety nor his immorality, but his hatred of the monks; who, in return, became his implacable enemies, and never ceafed to perfecute him, till they had banifhed him from Spain. They never could forget, that in the Sierra Morena he had built his houfe precifely on the fpot where had frood a convent, a convent which ferved as an afylum for the robbers, with whom the venerable fathers had been accuftomed to divide their plunder. Nor could they forgive his having made it a fundamental law of his new fettlements, that they fhould have no monks. Unfortunately, he had married a rich woman, who was neither young nor handfome, and, by her means, the monks became acquainted with fuch circumftances as might have otherwife otherwife efcaped them, and were enabled to treafure up againft him every unguarded expreffion, which at any time efcaped his lips. This valuable citizen was taken out of his bed, the 14 th of November, 1776, and, after being thut up twelve months in the prifon of the inquifition, his fentence was publicly read; all his effects were confifcated for the ufe of the inquifitors his judges, and he was condemned to eight years confinement in a convent.

It muft be confeffed, that in the perfon of Olavidé, the inquifitors flew at noble game; but, a few years after this, they refembled the eagle, when fhe ftoops to feed on carrion. The hifory of this tranfaction is worthy to be recorded. I fhall, therefore, give it from the relation of one who was prefent at the Auto de Fê, celebrated in the conventual church of $S$. Domingo, in Madrid, the 9 th of May, 1784 , when the whole procers was publicly read.

The principal actor in this farce was Ignacio Rodriguez, a beggar. The firtt profeffion of this man was arms; but of his conduct in that line little has tranfpired. It is certain, that he was with count $\phi$ Reilly in the unfortunate expedition againft Algiers, where he was wounded in the leg. In confequence of this he was difcharged as an invalid, and had an offer of the ufal penfion; but he chofe rather to caft himfelf on the public, and to enjoy his liberty, than to be loft in obfcurity with his companions. For this purpofe, he was careful to keep his wound from healing; and, fuch was his addrefs, that he procured a comfortable living, or rather, as it appeared, fared fumptuoufly every day.

After fome years, he was fo unfortunate as to attract the attention of D. Bernardo Cantero, the intendant general of the police, who, feeing him from day to day, inquired for what reafon he kept his wound open, and ordered him to have it healed. Rodriguez, not knowing to whom he fpoke, replied with infolence, "I afk alms, and not advice." This ill-timed anfwer proved his ruin.

between him and a female, called Juliana Lopez, caufed her to be followed, and arw refted. This woman, although artful, being taken by furprife, was confufed, and foon confeffed, that the paper fhe had delivered to the beggar contained fome materials for making love powder. On this evidence Rodriguez was taken into cuftody, with a female named Angela Barrios, who, being a woman of inferior talents, acted under them, and was employed only in commiffions of no great importance. All three being committed to the common jail, were frequently queftioned, and the refult of their examination was laid before the king, who, by the advice of his confeffor, referred the matter to the inquifitors. In confequence of this the prifoners were removed, and confined in the prifon of the inquifition.

No tribunal has fuch advantages in tracing out the truth, nor can any other inveftigate a dark tranfaction with fuch a certainty of fuccefs as this court. Unfettered by forms, and not limited for time, they are at liberty to bring whom they pleafe before them, to take them from their beds in the middle of the night, to examine them by furpiife, to terrify their imaginations, to torment their bodies, to fretch them on the rack, and to crofs examine them at diftant periods. With thefe advantages, the impoftor was made to confefs the whole of his practices, with all the moft minute particulars, and the names of the parties to whom he had fold his powder. He explained, in his confeffion, the materials of which he had compofed it; but thefe, to a modeft ear, fhould never have been mentioned; and he acknowledged, that every female, after taking it, had been obliged to grant him whatever he chofe to afls, without which the charm was to have no effect. Whenever he adminiftered it, he muttered fome necromantic formula, that he might give an air of mytery to the tranfaction, and infire the mind with confidence in its fuccefs.

Juliana Lopez, his affociate, ferved him as an emiffary and a panegyrift; and that the might in all refpects lend herfelf to his views and to his wifhes, fhe hired a conve-nient garden, to which he might retire at all feafons, whenever it fuited his convenience.

Angela Barrios acted as a fervant to the others, and being of a weak underftanding, was never admitted to their confidence. Fidelity and filence on her part were fometimes however requifite, and in theie the never failed.
The procefs, according to cuftom, contained the moft minute particulars. Their crimes were proved by a multitude of teftimonies, and their guilt was confrmed by their own confeffions. From thefe it appeared, that his powder was adminiftered to perfons of all ranks; and one of the inquifitors has fince informed me, that many ladies of high faffion in Madrid were duped by him, although out of tendemefs their names had been concealed.

When the procefs was gone through, the judges refolved to celebrate an Auto de Fé publicly in the church of the Padres del Salvador, but the king would not confent, that the nuns of S. Domingo fhould iofe their privilege of having the Auto in their church. The inquifitors gave way, but fent a requeft, that the nuns might not be admitted to the grate, left their ears hould be offended, and the purity of their imaginaimaginations thould be defiled. This mef fage had the effect, which might have been expected. Their curiofity was the more excited, and of all the nuns four only were ablent from the grate.

On the day appointed, at fix in the morning, the people began to affemble in the ftreet of the inquifition, and the troops took their ftation to preferve good order. About eight the beggar left his dungeon, leaning on his crutches, and attended by a capuchin friar of no refpectable appearance, named Father Cardenas. As foon as he appeared in court, he fell upon his knees before one of the inquifitors, who with the greateft mildnefs and gentlenefs addreffed him thus: "My fon, you are going to " hear the relation of your crimes, and the "fentence pronounced for the expiation " of your guilt. Our lenity is great, be= " caufe our holy tribunal, always moft ins "dulgent, feeks rather to reform than ${ }^{\text {st }}$ punifh. This extortation ended, which is the fane, sven when the criminal is committed to the flames, they proceeded to throw over the fhoulders of the beggar his fan benito, or more properly his faco bendito, being the fackcloth with S. Andrew's crofs, anciently worn by penitents. On his head they placed the cap with ferpents, lizards, and blackbeetles, a green candle in his hand, and round his neck a halter. 「० Juliana Lopez the fame fpeech was made, and when the had been clothed in fimilar attire, fhe ftood, although not with equal confidence, near to her companion.

Laft of all came forth Angela Barrios, who, trembling and bathed in tears, fell down upon her knees, and begged the inquifitors to fpare her life. She was anfwered, that the holy tribunal was not accuftomed to put any one to death; that they would do her no harm; and that as her offence was not equal to that of her companions, they had not even provided for her a fan benito, the difgraceful badge, by which all, who have worn it, are rendered, with their families, infamous for ever.

When every thing was thus arranged, the proceffion began to move. In front marched foldiers to clear the way; then appeared the fandard of the holy office, fupported by alguazils, and followed by familiars, with the learned doctors of the inquifition; next advanced the beggar; fupported by his crutches, and attended by two fecretaries, who carried the whole procefs in a box lined with velvet; and the lithle capuchin, as confeffor, with the Marquis of Cogolludo, fon to the Duke of Medina Cæli, of the blood royal, and the firt nobleman in Spain, as alguazil mayor, brought up the rear:

No fooner had the pageant entered the church than mafs began; after which they read the procefs in the hearing of the whole affembly, which confined of the principal nobility, with all the ladies of the court, who had been invited by la Marquefa de Cogolluco, and fat with hes on a ftage raifed for this occafion.

The fecretaries were frequently interrupted in reading by loud burfts of laughter, in which the beggar joined. The mirth was, however, in fome breafts, attended with a degree of trepidation, when in the procefs circumftances were related, in which ladies who were prefent, had been concerned,

After the whole of the procefs had been read, the chief inquifitor rang a little bell, and the prifoners drew nigh to hear their fentence. That of Ignacio Rodriguez was, to be whipped through the ftreets of Madrid, to be inftructed and fortified in the myfteries of the catholic faith by a fpiritual guide appointed by the court, with whom he was to go through holy exercifes for one month, fafting on the Fridays on bread and water; and at the end of this period he was to make a general confeffion. He was to be five years fhut up in the penitentiary houfe of Toledo, and afterwards to be banihed for ever from Madrid and from the royal manfions, with an obligation to inform the holy office wherever he fhould happen to refide. The fentence of the other was not fo fevere.

The whole ceremony ended about three in the afternoon.

The day following, the beggar, naked down to his waift, was mounted on an afs, attended by the Marquis of Cogolludo. Thus accompanied, the impoftor was conducted through the freets, but without receiving any fripes; and as he proceeded, he was frequently refrefhed by his friends with bifcuits and wine; whilft many, who knew not the nature of his offence, thinking him a heretic, cried out, wiva la Virgen, viva Maria puriffma, to which he replied, por mi que wiva.

This ceremony ended, the Marchionefs of Cogolludo gave a grand entertainment to the judges and officers of the inquifition.

Had it been the intention of the king to make the inquifition, preparatory to its abolition, contemptible in the eyes of the whole nation, he could not have taken any ftep more effectual for the purpofe, than he did, when he called upon that tribunal to examine into offences, which chould have been infinitely below its notice, and to appear in the proceffion with a wretch, who fhould have been punihed in fecret by the vileft minifter of juftice.

foners. Upon thefe particulars I fhail be filent; but I muft obferve that the original. inquifition, armed with dreadful powers, un-: der the appellation of the Spiritual Court, fill exifts in England ; where, as in Spain, the poor fuffer moft by the abufe of its authority. The ferpent with us appears to have loft its venom: it is torpid, but not dead, and fhould, at any future period, our government be changed ; it may revive, and be as deftructive to our children as it has : already been to cur progenitors.

In the vicinity of Seville is a curious monument of antiquity, the amphitheatre of Italica, highly worthy the attention of all, who are fond of fuch remains, but to me they were little interefting. It is an. oval of two hundred and ninety-one feet by two hundred and four. If we mayjudge of Italica by the extent of its ruins, it was a confiderabie city, and although fo little now is to be feen above the furface of the foil, yet we know that formerly it was a bifhop's fee, and prior to that period, it gave birth to Trajan, to Adrian, and to. Theodofus.

derable diftance lies fo low, that it is frequently overflowed, and upon fome occafions the water has been eight feet high, even in their habitations. The foil is rich, and being at the fame time very deep, its fertility is inexhauftible. The produce is corn, leguminous plants, hemp, flax, lemons, oranges and liquorice. The quantity of this exported from Spain is faid to be annually not lefs than four thoufand quintals, or nearly two hundred tons, a confiderable part of which is fuppofed to be purchafed by the porter-brewers in London. Could they be prevailed upon to omit the cocculus indicus, they might be permitted to ufe the liquorice without refrraint.

I had the curiofity to make inquiries at the cuftom-houre in London, where I found that the principal marts for this produce were formally Italy and French Flanders, but that of late the importation from Spain has rapidly increafed, and that from being only two tons feventeen hundred weight three quarters and fixteen pounds, in the year ${ }_{17} 85$, it became fifty-eight tons three hundred weight one quarter and four-

Tons. Cwt. Qrs. 1b.

| out-ports |  | $10914 \quad 318$ |

In this period the proportion of the outports has increafed from twenty-four tons eleven hundred weight two quarters and twenty-five pounds, to fifty-five tons fur teen hundred weight two quarters and fifteen pounds. From which circumfance we may collect, that London has taught the country brewers the ufe of this innocent and pleafant drug in making porter.

In confequence of vapours and miafmata, occafioned by ftagnant water, and by frequent floods, the inhabitants of Seville and its neighbourhood are fubject to tertians, to putrid fevers, and to hifterical diforders. likewife infented with worms, accompanied with epilepfies, efpecially in the more youthful fubjects. This connection I have frequently had occafion to obferve; and, from this circumftance, I comprehend the principle on which an able phyfician is mentioned, in the London Practice of Pbyjc, to have ordered the powder of tin, in a cafo of epilepfy. Yet, I muft acknowledge a fufpicion, that the compiler of that valuable work, who appears to have been fome old apothecary in extenfive practice, did not difcover, at the time when he made a memorandum of the cafe, that the phyfician was then prefcribing to the occafiona! caufe, and not to the difeafe. The fkill of a practitioner is difcerned, not merely by his readinefs in diftinguifhing difeares, but by his attention to their pre-difpofing caufes. The empyric, often fatisfied with prefcribing to the fymptom, is liable to be fatally miftaken in his diftinctions, and never attempts to invertigate the caufe. Hence it is, that the publication of formula, fuch as thofe to which I have referred, will never be ufeful to him, or indeed to any one, who has not been regularly bred to the profeffion. The fcience of phyfic is not fo eafily acquired as fome have imagined, and have been taught to think by phyficians, who, with the appearance of difintereftednefs and candour, have publifhed their fyfems of domeftic medicine. To diftinguifh difeafes, and to invefigate their caufe, requires much knowledge, deep reflection, and a natural fagacity, to be improved by reading, and by extenfive practice. Even the moft fkilful and attentive are fometimes miftaken; and at this we thall not be furprifed, if we confider the vaft variety of difeafes, to which the human frame is fubject. The bare infpection of any fyftem of nofology will be fufficient to convince a reafonable man that the fcience is abftrufe. In the Nofoiogia Metbodica of Sauvage, we find ten claffes, fortythree arders, and more than three hundred genera, in many of which are from ten to twenty fpecies, each diftinguifhed from the other, and denominated by its occafional caufe. Dr. Cullen has indeed reduced the number both of genera and species, by confidering many of them as fymptomatic of other difeafes, and not as idiopaA a 4

thic ; yet even this diftinction fhews more clearly the abftrufenefs of the fcience, and how liable they muft be, who are not perfeetly inftructed, to make miftakes. I have dwelt upon this fubject, from a firm perfuafion, that "fyftems of domeftic medicine". have done much mifchief to mankind, and that the mof dangerous idea, which can be impreffed upon the mind is, that "every man may be his own phyfician." In a country like Spain, a perfon not bred to the profeffion may be reduced to the neceffity of prefcribing to his neighbours; but in England, this practice, unlefs in the cleareft cafes, is much to be condemned.

I have mentioned the difeafes incident to the inhabitants of Sevilie, arifing from humidity ; but others there are which originate in heat. Whenever they have the Solano wind, that is, whenever the wind blows from Africa, they become liable to pleurifies; but what is chiefly complained of, both by phyficians and by magiftrates, is an irritability of nerves, influencing the morals in a variety of ways.

Before I quitted Seville, according to my ufual practice, I enquired into the price of labour

The price of wheat, at different periods, and at different feafons of the year, has been fo remarkable, that I fhall fubjoin a table,

In the correfponding periods, as taken from Smith's Wealth of Nations, the higheft price is $7 \mathrm{s}$.6 d . and the loweft 3 s. 9 d . Had the commerce of corn been unreftained, the price in Spain could never have varied in fuch wide extremes, to the deftruction of manufactures.

When I had fatisfied my curiofity at Seville, and had refolved next to vifit Cadiz, I fent and hired the cabin of a paffage-boat, which was to leave the city in the evening, and falling down the Guadalquivir, was to arrive in about fix and thirty hours at $S$. Lucar.

The common price for every paffenger is eight reals, or about $1 s .7$ d. but for the whole cabin I paid twenty reals, or a hard dollar, being a fmall fraction under four fhillings fterling. In this I had no great bargain, becaufe my apartment was not more than fix feet by five, and about three feet high. My only comfort was, that I could ftretch myfelf at night upon a bear fkin, and faw myfelf by day feparated from a multitude, fome of whom were not remarkable for cleanlinefs.

Among the rabble, I obferved a young Francifan

Francifcan friar, and a genteel French merchant, who by no means feemed to be fatisfied with their fituation. At the clofing of the day, the whole affembly joined in the Ave Maria, our young friar taking the lead, and diftinguifing himfelf by the ffrength and melody of his voice; after which he entertained the company with fome good fequidillas, tiranas, and other Spanifh fongs. I was fo well fatisfied with his voice and manner, that in the morning I invited him to my cabin, and was delighted to find in him a pleafant and converfable companion.

The wind was favourable, the fky was clear, and the courfe being nearly in one ftraight line, little attention was required to the helm. In fuch circumftances it was not to be wondered at, that our Palinurus, who had been watching all the night, hould be inclined to nod by day. But whilf fleep had taken poffeffion of his eye-lids, his attention feemed to be awake, for when at any time, by the fhifting of the wind, either the direction or degree of preffure of the helm was varied, he inftantly moved his hand, and even before he opened his eyes, he put the veffel right. Thus it is refpecting founds. No noife, howeyer violent, roufes thofe who are accuftomed to hear it; but, if it be unufual, or if it be fuch as would call them to action when awake, alshough moderate, it makes them fart: thus it feems as if the foul was capable of exercifing judgment during fleep.

The country all the way, for the fpace of twenty leagues between Seville and S. Lucar, is flat, the foil is deep, and the paftures are covered with a perpetual verdure.

In this little voyage I was fo well pleafed with my young friar, that I bore his expences, agreed to take him for my compa-s nion and my guide as far as Cadiz; and, fuch was the confidence I repofed in him, that when we had landed on the beach, and taken horfes to S. Lucar, I committed my baggage to his care, whilt I haftened to pay my compliments to our conful ; but, to my aftonifhment, on my return, I found that I had been cherifhing a thief. He would have made an apology; but, as I wanted no explanation, when I had oculax demonftration, I took my leave, without reproaching reproaching his ingratitude; and hiring horfes, I made the beft of my way towards Cadiz.

The country is hilly, the foil at a lower level, and near the fea, is fand; but all the intermediate fpace is a ftiff clay, and the road is abominably bad. The diftance is fix leagues.

About mid-way I counted twenty teams of oxen tilling one piece of land. The plough is by no means fuited to the foil, having no fin to the fhare, no coulter, nor any mould-board; but, inftead of the latter, two wooden pins. This, in light fand, may anfwer very well, but is certainly little calculated to fubdue a ftubborn clay. The highet of the hills, expofed to the meridian fun, have vines, and the fcene is often beautifully varied by extenfive plantations of the olive.

As foon as I arrived at Puerto de Santa Maria, I enquired for the paffage-boat to Cadiz. They informed me at the pofada, that no wherry would pais that day. I, however, preffed forward to the beach, where I was foon furrounded by a number of watermen, who all affured me, that I was come too late for the common paffageboat, but that for two hard dollars I might have a vefiel to myfelf. Unwilling to be detained all day, I agreed, and was conducted to a boat half filled with paffengers, and, after waiting near an hour for the full complement, we fet fail. As the wind was fair, we foon made our paffiage; and, on quitting the boat, I had the mortification to fee each perfon pay two reals, or four pence halfpenny, inftead of two hard dollars, or eight hillings; but it was to no purpofe to complain.

THE city of Cadiz occupies a promontory at the extremity of a peninfula, and is joined to the ifle of Leon only by a caufeway. It is wafhed to the eaftward by the gentle waves of a well protected road; but, to the weftward, it is open and expofed to the fury of the ocean.

The freets are narrow, yet well paved and clean. The moft beautiful part of the city looks towards the Puerto de Santa Maria, where the houfes are lofty, built of white free-ftone, and ornamented with painted balconies. They have in front a wide parade, well gravelled, planted with trees, and communicating with the fea-road, where the merchantmen and fhips of war find finelter.

[ 369 ]

f-Two confiderable fquares, one for the market, the other called Plaza de San Antonio, with the Calle Ancba joining to it by way of mall, contribute both to beauty and to-health; and the whole city being nearly furrounded by a rampart, this forms an elevated, airy, and delightful walk, much frequented in the evenings.

The moft advantageous view of Cadiz and its environs may be had from the fignal tower : from whence you look immediately down upon the houfes, whofe flat roofs, covered with a white cement, have a fingular yet moft pleafing appearance. To the weftward, you command the ocean, with numerous veffels, fome ftretching away, others entering the harbour; and, on the land fide, you difcover the four interefting fea-port towns of Rota, Santa Maria, Port Royal, and Caraca, with the ifle of Leon, and the connecting caufeway, whilf a rich country, hanging towards the fetting fun, bounds the diftant profpect.

They reckon now in Cadiz, not more than fixty-five thoufand nine hundred and eighty-feven fouls; but, about ten years fince, it is faid to have contained eightyVol. II.

For their pavements, for the cleanlinefs of their freets, for a well regulated police, for fome of their beft edifices, and for many wife inftitutions, they have been indebted to their late governor, Count O'Reilly. Previous to his appointment, this city was remarkable for filth and naftinefs; and from the miftaken clemency of Bucarelli, the former governor, robberies were frequently committed, murders were not uncommon, and fuch was the infolence of thieves, that they gave public warning to the inhabitants, not to make a noife when they fhould be ftopped.

The moft diftinguifhed buildings are the two cathedrals, one ancient, the other not yet finihed. The former is chiefly remarkable for fome good pictures, and for its treafures, confifing of jems, filver candlefticks and lamps, both numerous and bulky; three cuitodias, one of which, confructed of the fineit filver, weighs fiftyone artobss, or more than half a ron; another is mofty of foid gold. .

[ 371 ]

The new cathedral is a vaft pile, with large and lofty domes, and many well proportioned pillars; yet the whole appears heavy and difgufting. The effect is owing to the fingle circumftance of its being loaded with a very projecting cornice, fuch as would not be void of elegance in a rotunda of vaft dimenfions, but by no means fuitable to an edifice, which abounds with angles. All who view this building are ftruck with the abfurdity of thefe prepofterous ornaments, yet the architect wants refolution to retract them. It is not, however, impoffible, that the waves may wipe away this difgrace to tafte, becaufe they have begun their devaftations on that fide, and not more than ten feet are interpofed between the building and the fea.

Near to the cathedral is the Plaza de Toros, for the bull-feafts, built intirely with wood, making externally a mean appearance; but within, it is both pretty and commodious. I had been folicitous to fee the dexterity of the moft famous matador in Spain, named Romero, but at this feafon the bull-feafts are prohibited.

Not far from hence is the obfervatory,

in a moft advantageous fituation; but unfortunately the inftruments, although the beft that our Englifh artifts of the day could furnif, are neglected, and will foon be ruined.

The academy for the three noble arts of painting, fculpture, and architecture, is at prefent, as a building, fcarcely worthy of attention. It will, however, be removed into the centre of the citys when a fufficient fund can be provided for that purpofe.

In the convents are a few good pictures; more efpecially in the cloifter of the Auguftin friars; and in that of the capuchins we find fome moft worthy of attention, by Mu -rillo. In the garden of the Francifcans is the dragon's-blood-tree, mentioned by Quer, in his Botany of Spain.

Of the three hofpitals, two are mof remarkable for neatnefs; the third deferves reproach for filth and naftinefs; yet this perhaps is the beft conducted for general utility. It is called the Royal or Military Hofpital, becaufe defigned for foldiers, and has fourfcore ftudents, who are maintained and educated at the king's expence. It has a good botanical garden, and a theatre for diffections furnifhed with fubjects from among the patients. One of the two diftinguifhed for neatnefs is fet apart for women; the other, dedicated to San Fuan de Dios, and defigned for men, is elegant. All the wards are paved with marble in checkers of black and white; and inftead of white walls, of wainfcoting, or of fucco, the fides are covered with Dutch tiles.

In this hofpital, the beds having no cur-tains, I faw death in all its ftages, from its diftant approach to its clofing fcene; from ordinary difeafe to the laft and feebleft ftruggles, to the pale vifage, and the trembling lips of expiring nature. My attention was directed towards each dying object by a crofs at the bed's head, which indicated, that he had received the facraments of the eucharift, and of extreme unction. To one, who had formerly walked an hofpital; to one, whofe office leads him to attend the dying and the dead, death muft naturally have loft much of its terror ; but the view of fo many objects of diftrefs, finking under the preffure of difeafe, I munt confefs, fpread a gloom over my mind, fuch as no one thould fubject himB b 3

They have commonly in this hofpital more than fix thoufand patients, and out of thefe they annually lofe one tenth; but at different feafons the proportion varies.

Befide thefe horpitals for the fick, there is a retreat for widows, founded by Juan Fragela, a Turkey merchant, born at Damafcus, and fettled at Cadiz, who died A. D. ${ }^{1756}$, aged one hundred and four. In this hofpital forty-feven widows have each two good rooms, with a weekly allowance of fix reals. They appear to find in it a comfortable refuge.

The moft interefing eftablifhment in Cadiz, and the beft conducted of its kind in Spain, is the hofpicio, or general workhoufe. This building is large and lofty, handfome and commodious. In it are received the poor of every nation, who are unable to maintain themfelves, and in the firft place, ozphans, deferted children, and the aged, who are paffed the capability for labour, the blind, the lame, idiots, and mad people, but efpecially priefts, when aged and reduced to poverty. Even frangers paffing through the city, with permiffion of the governor, may be entertained

- Neatnefs univerfally prevails, and all, who are here received, are clean, well clothed, and have plenty of the beft provifions. Care is taken to infruct them in the chriftian doctrines, and every fix months the young people are publicly examined. Their education is to read, to write, to calt accounts; and fuch as manifét abilities, are not only inftructed in the principles of geometry, but, if they are fo inclined, are taught to draw. The boys are trained to weaving, and to various crafts; the girls fpin wool, flax, and cotton; they knit, make lace, or are employed in plain work.

Of the eight hundred and thirty-four paupers provided for at the time of my vifiting this eftablifhment, the 2 Ift of March, $17^{87}$, the old men were one hundred and nine, the aged women one huindred and thirty-one, the boys two hundred and thitty-five, the girls one hundred and feventy-one, married people eighteen, idiots and mad people, thinty-four; under cot-mara : Bb4 ...... rection, rection, men fifty-nine, women thirty-eight; as fervants thirty-nine. The number indeed is perpetually varying; but in the whole of the preceding year, the rations of provifion were three hundred twelve thoufand four hundred and nine, which number, divided by three hundred and fixty-five, points out the average to have been eight hundred and fifty-five perfons maintained daily in this houre. Forty-five looms, and fixteen ftocking frames are provided for their fervice, with a fufficient number of fpinningwheels, working benches, tools for carpenters, turners, hoemakers, and taylors, a twifting mill, a fpinning jenny, and a machine for carding cotton.

- To encourage induftry, an account is kept for each individual, wherein he is made debtor to the houfe at the rate of three reals, or about feven-pence a day, and has credit given him for all the work he does; and fhould the balance be, as often happens, in his favour, it is paid to. him, whenever he can make it appear, to the fatisfaction of the directors, that he is able to eftabliih himfelf without their future aid. I examined the accounts of many, who cleared for themfelves more than half a crown a week; and were look-. ing out for fettlements, that they might marry, and gather the fruits of their own induftry.

Adjoining to the houfe is a fpacious fhop for the accommodation of all, who are willing to work, wherein are provided proper implements, and raw materials; and the moment any one has completed his work, he receives the price of his labour, without any deduction; being at liberty not only to lodge, where he pleafes, but to fpend his gains according to his fancy. Here I counted more than feventy young: people at their wheels.

But becaufe many, who would work, are indifpenfably confined at home, where, from poverty, they are unable to procure either wheels or wool; the governors provide both, and pay them, without any deduction, for their work. By thefe means, when I was there, of three hundred and forty-eight famiiies, more than five hundred fouls, were trained to induftry. The directors informed me of three children, the eldeft nine years of age, who by fin-: ning gained fix reals, that is more than.

fourteen pence 2 day, and maintained a paralytic father.

Not fatisfied with thefe exertions, they have eftabifined fchools in the diftant quarters of the city, on the fame plan; and, providing the beft mafters in every branch of bufinefs, which they wifh to cultivate, they admit freely all, who are defirous of being taught.

It t is their intention to pick out from the brighteft of their boys the beft draftfmen, and having infructed them in the various languages of Europe, to make them travel for the acquifition of knowledge, and the advancement of manufactures.

As the furrounding parifhes may not find it convenient to adopt fimilar inftitutions on a finaller fcale, therefore they receive the infants, the aged, and the infrom, from any of them, on condition of being paid in due proportion for their board.
The management is vefted in twelve directors, who are prefided over by the governor of the city for the time being, with power to fill up of themelves any. vacancy, which may happen in their body. Of thefe, fix take the general overight of the various depatments; the other fix nomus

One is accomptant general; another is treafurer; a third is fteward, to collect the rents, and to manage the revenue; a fourth has the overight of manufactures; the fifth takes the charge of the proviions; and the fixth provides the raiment. oms rex Tithom

All their accounts are clear, diftinct, and kept with moft minute exactnefs.

The fources of their revenue are from voluntary contributions; legacies; a tax of one real a fanega on all the wheat brought into the city; and from the produce of labour in the houfe. The whole expence, in the year 1786, was one million three hundred and eighty-five thoufand reals, viz.

 Shatertome $1,3^{8} 5,000$ reals vellon. Which,

[ 380 ]

Which, dividing by one hundred, that is by cutting off two figures from the right, leaves thirteen thoufand eight hundred and fifty pounds.

The preceding year the clothing was nearly three times as much ; but the other expences differed little from the year now under examination. If we take the average at eight hundred and fifty perfons, we fhall find the food for each amounting to fix hundred and thirty-feven reals, or fix pounds feven fhilling and four pence, and the clothes to thirteen fhillings and eightpence. But in order to find out the whole expence on account of each individual, we muft confider, that during the three years fince the hofpicio was firft opened, the goods unfold in the magazines amount to four hundred and feventy-three thoufand one hundred and fifty-one reals, which being divided by three, gives one hundred and fifty-feven thoufand feven hundred and feventeen for the proportion of one year. Now this being deducted from one million three hundred and eighty-five thourand, leaves one million two hundred and twenty-feven thoufand two hundred and eighty-three as the expence of the public for the year 1786, and this, divided by eight hundred and fifty, gives one thoufand four hundred and forty-three reals, or fourteen pounds eight fhillings and feven pence for the expence of each, not including the produce of his labour.

This accumulation of goods in their magazines arifes from the want of a market. Public bodies being deficient in watchfulnefs, activity, and zeal, labour under this difadvantage, and will riever find a vent for their commodities, unlefs at a price greatly inferior to what private manufacturers will be able to obtain. From hence arifes one argument againft fuch eftablifhments; but although ftrong, it is by no means the ftrongeft, becaufe univerfally people in confinement, and deprived of liberty, eat too much, and work too little. This beyond a queftion is the cafe at Cadiz, in the hofpicio, in which they have ninety-two holidays allowed them, and in which the expence of food and raiment is double what it fhould be.

and in the firft place we muft admire the activity and zeel of the directors. That gentlemen of diftinguifhed talents, and men of bufneis, flould be animated with fuch zeal for the public good, as to devote a confiderable portion of their time to it, and affemble every evening to fuperintend this work, can rever be fuficiently applauded. In the detail of this bufinefs we difcover not only zeal, but zeal well directed for the ben of purpofes. Nothing can be more worthy of imitation than the public work-fhop, with the practice of providing wheels and wool for thore who are confined at home; nor can any thing more effectually excite the ingenuous mind to induftry than the idea, that he fhall be rewarded for his pains, and in the iffue reap the fruits of his own exertions. But inafmuch as many among the lower claffes are defitute of generous fentiments, and as moft of them have, by their fupinenefs, reduced themfelves to difteefs and poverty; the regulation introduced into one of our workhoures at Bradford, in Wilthire, by a. moft ingenious manager, may perhaps, and, I apprehend, undoubtedly will, be found preferable for general utility. He calculates what every one is capable of earning, without opprefinon, and accordingly appoints the morning and the evening tafk, which muft be performed before they either eat or drink. When this tafk is accomplihed; whatever more they earn, they immediately receive. From this conduct of the manager, the poor feel conftantly the two-fold incentive of hope and fear, which certainly is much better for them than to be under the influence of one motive only, and that more remote. His plan is to receive and to relieve the poor in the hour of diftrefs; but at the fame time to teach them induftry, and to get rid of them as foon as pofible. fict :

- preferable

In certain circumfances it may be wife to take children from their parents, and to educate them in public feminaries; but then it hould be remembered, that thus trained they are feldom hardy, and that they have never been found to make good domertics; nor are they qualifed to rear a family, like thore, who have been bred up in cottages, and have, from their infancy,

To take old people from their families, and, under pretence of providing better for their wants, to rob them of thofe endearments, and that tender care, which they would have received from their neareft relatives and friends, is cruel in the extreme; and to leave empty a wretched cottage, or a miferable bed, for the reception of frefh wretchednefs and mifery, is fo far from being either politic or wife, that no conduct can be more remote from wifdom and found policy. If, the moment you had provided for the object of diftrefs, you were to pull down the habitation, and fet fire to the bed; if you were to deftroy the neft, which nothing but wretchednefs can occupy; the cafe would then be different. The principle on which is built this obfervation, being little underftood, and lefs attended to, I fhall endeavour to explain it.

Navigators make mention of an illand in the South Seas, which, from the firft difcoverer, is called 7 uan Fernandez. In this fequeftered fpot he placed a colony of goats, confifting

conffing of one male attended by his female. This happy couple, finding pafture in abundance, could readily obey the firft command, to increafe and multiply, till in procefs of time they had replenifhed their little illand. Dampier, vol. i. p. 88. In advancing to this period they were ftrangers to mifery and want, and feemed to glory in their numbers: but from this unhappy moment they began to fuffer hunger; yet continuing for a time to increafe their num ${ }^{2}$ bers, had they been endued with reafon, they muft have apprehended the extremity of famine. In this fituation the weakeft firft gave way, and plenty was again refored. Thus they fluctuated between happinefs and mifery, and either fuffered want or rejoiced in abundance, according as their numbers were diminifhed or increafed; never at a ftay, yet nearly balancing at all times their quantity of food. This degree of equipoife was from time to time deftroyed, either by epidemical difeafes, or by the arrival of fome veffel in diffrefs. On fuch occafions their numbers were confiderably reduced; but to compenfate for this alarm, and to comfort them for the lofs of their companions, the furvivors never failed immediately to meat returning plenty : they were no longer in fear of famine; they ceafed to regard each other with an evil eye; all had abundance; all were cortented; all were happy. Thus, what might have been conildered as misfortunes, proved a fource of comfort; and, to them et leaft, partial evil was univerfal good.

When the Spaniards found that the Engliif privateers reforted to this ifland for provifions, they refolved on the total extirpation of the goats, and for this purpore they put on fhore a greyhound dog and bitch. Ulloa, b. 2. c. 4. Thefe in their turn increafed and multiplied, in proportion to the quantity of food they met with; but in confequence, as the Spaniards had forefeen, the breed of goats diminifhed. Had they been totally deftroyed, the dogs likewife muft have perifhed. But as many of the goats retired to the craggy rocks, where the dogs could never follow them, defcending only for ihort intervals to feed, with fear and circumfpection, in the vallies, few of thefe, befides the carelefs and the rafh, became a prey; and none but the moft watchful, watchfol, frong, and active of the dogs could get a fuficiency of food. Thus a new kind of balance was eftablifhed. The weakeft of both fpecies were among the firt to pay the debt of nature; the moft active and vigorous preferved their lives. It is the quantity of food which regulates the number of the human fpecies.

If we fuppofe, in a good climate, with plenty of food and healthy habitations, the number of children in each family on the average to be four, and the mean age to which they fhall arrive to be fifty years; if the men fhould marry at the age of twentyone, and the women at nineteen, then one couple, at the end of thirty-three years, will leave tweive defcendants. In fiftynine years there will be twenty-four perfons; and at the end of one hundred and twenty-nine years, they will be one hundred and eighty-eight, or ninety-four times their firf number:ou, the Dutch, twelve thoufand. Should any one conceive either this fact, as it very probably is, to be miftated, or my fuppofition to go much beyond the mark, he is welcome to reduce the number as low as he pleafes, provided he leaves me in poffefion of this principle, that in certain circumftances and in given periods, men will multiply in proportion to their food.

We are informed, that the Ifraelites, when they came into Egypt, were feventy. fouls; that they remained in the land of Gomen four hundred and thirty years, and that when they departed, omitting the Levites, the amount of all, that were able to go out to war, wass fix hundred and three thoufand five hundred and fifty males, of twenty years old and upwards. From thefe data we may conclude, that the Ifraelites doubled their numbers every twentyfeven years, or nearly within that term.

The population in North-America doubles every five and twenty years; bat in fome provinces every fifteen years. In modern Europe it requires, according to Dr. Smith, five hundred years to double the number of its inhabitants. The reafon of this becomes obvious, if we call to mind the principles on which depend the propagation of the fpecies, and the caufes by which its progrefs may be retarded, or altogether limited. Thefe are, ift, Want of food, as on the highlands of Scotland, where a woman will bring twenty children, and rear only two; or in the woods among the hunting tribes; or even in the moft highly cultivated country, when the population is advanced to the utmoft ability of the foil to nouriih, like as in China, where numbers are expofed, and perifh in their infancy, for want of food, and where many are deterred from marriage by the fear of wanting bread.

2d, Difeafes, either peculiar to the climate as at Senegal and at Batavia; or induced, as at Conftantinople, and even in London, by infection, foul air, confinement, and bad nurfing: difeafes not confined to woods, not ravaging the favage tribes alone, but fpreading with more fatal virulence in great, in rich, and in luxurious cities.
$3^{\text {d, Want of commerce for the promo- }}$ tion of induftry, and of a market for the furplus of its produce.

4th, War in all its forms, whether catried on by uncuitivated or by polifhed nations, either for plunder, for conqueft, or for the extenfion of commerce.

5 th, Superfitious vows impored on the monatic orders, and celibacy enjoined the priefthood.

6th, Emigration of the breeding ftock, and transference of capitals, ariing either from a bad police, or from a vicious form of government, and the want of that fecurity of perfon and of property which can be enjoyed only where freedom reigns; that is, where men are fure of being protected from the oppreffion of arbitrary power, and are fubject to none but wife and equitable laws.

7 th, Want of land, or the opportunity of acquiring it by induftry.

8th, Want of habitations.;
Now in proportion as you remove thefe obftacles, your population will advance. When, therefore, it is your object to increafe the number of your people; the way to accomplifh this will be obvious, and the tank in Spain, under a wife government, would be eafy; but when the quefion is, how to banig banif poverty and wretchednefs, boc opus, bic labor eft. Yet in the inveftigation of this queftion we have one general principle to guide us: increafe the quantity of food, or where that is limited, prefcribe bounds to popuiation. In a fully peopled country, to fay, that no one fhall fuffer want is abfurd. Could you fupply their wants, you would foon doubie their numbers, and advance your population ad infinitum, which is contrary to the fuppofition. It is indeed pofiible to banifh hunger, and to fupply that want at the expence of another; but then you muft determine the proportion that chall marry, becaufe you will have no other way to limit the number of your people. No human efforts will get rid of this dilemma; nor will men ever find a method, either more natural, or better in any refpect, than to leave one appetite to regulate another.

[ 391 ]

Having already enlarged upon this fubject, I fhall here only refer to fuch rules, as may enabie us to form a proper judgment of the workhoufe in Cadiz.

[ 392 ]

ment, is benevolent and wife: to fupply them at home with implements and raw materials is politic; but to expect a profit from the labour of people in confinement is abfurd.
To fupply the indigent with food and faiment, provided you thereby do not offer a premium to indolence, prodigality, and vice, is falutary.

To correct the lazy and the fpendthrift, to fhut them up in houfes of confinement till they have acquired habits of fobriety and induftry, is both juft and prudent ; but in fuch eftablifhments, to feed, to clothe, to lodge them better than the fober and the diligent are lodged, are clothed, are fed, is not agreeable to any principles of equity, and is inconfiftent with found policy.

Upon the grounds already ftated, I may venture to predict, that notwithfanding the zeal and efforts of the gentlemen, who fuperintend the general workhoufe at Cadiz, and in fpite of all their wife regulations, unlefs the people in it are compelled to work more, and have lefs to eat; in a courfe of years the city will be nearly as full of beggars as before the foundation of this houfe was laid. For whilf all the habitations, now recently emptied, remain to receive new tenants in fimilar diftrefs with thofe who quitted them, and whilf fuch a comfortable refuge is at hand for them ; indolence, prodigality, and vice will have nothing to fear, but every thing to hope ; and the moft improvident will not hefitate to contrace thofe bands, on which the propagation of their race depends.

I cannot quit the hofpicio, without taking notice of the kitchen, on account of its fingular ftructure. The chimney is an octagon, in the middle of the room, furrounded by fixteen ftoves, eight of them large, and contiguous to it, and as many fmall, communicating by means of flues. The larger ftoves are three feet diameter, by three and an half in depth. Under the kitchen is a cellar to receive the ahes.

The merchants of this city, ever fince the commerce of Peru and Mexico was tranfported here from Seville, have rifen in confideration; but, in the prefent moment, they have received a fevere fhock by the semowal of the barrier, which had fecured that that monopoly to them. The confequence has been, a glutted market in the Trans atlantic colonies, many failures in Cadiz, and not a few in thofe cities, which have eagerly engaged in new and flattering enterprizes, without fufficient capitals to ftand the fhock of competition and the heavy lofes inevitable upon the firf laying open of an extenfive commerce.

The Spanifh government has never yet acquired any liberal ideas refpecting trade, and even at the prefent moment, fome of their beft political writers refemble lag hounds hunting the fitale fcent, whilft the fleeteft are already in poffeffion of the game. Infead of throwing down every obftacle to commerce, they labour to contract its limits, under the vain hope of eftablifhing a monopoly, without confidering either their own want of capital, of induftry, and of an enterprifing fivit, or the utter imponibility of preventing fmuggling, whilf other nations, with greater advantages for trade, can underfell them in the market. Until they fhall be more enlightened, until they mall have banifhed their inquintors, and until the happy period thall arrive, arrive, when, under the protection of a free government, they fhall have reftored public credit, and placed it on a firm foundation; all their prohibitions, all their feverities exercifed on the property and perfons of the illicit traders, all their commercial treaties, and all their commercial wars, into which ambition may betray them, will be frivolous and vain; becaufe no efforts will ever prevail againft the united interefts of their own fubjects, and of ail furrounding nations.

$\therefore$ Even at home, the watchfulnefs and energy of government have never been able to enforce its prohibitions; for, notwithftanding thefe, when I was travelling through Spain, all the men appeared in Manchefter cotton goods, and no woman was feen without her muflin veil. In Spain, as throughout Europe, it is found, that when the price of infurance is lefs than the duties impored on the commodity, no laws are fufficient to controul the operations of illicit traders., $\%$, 1 -

Previous to the year 1720 , the commerce of America was confined to Seville, not intentionaliy, but by a regulation of Charles $V$. in the year 1529 , who, with a view of $2:$. laying laying that commerce open for all his fubjects of Caftille, permitted merchants to freight their hips from the ports of Bifcay, the Afturias, Gallicia, Malaga and Carthagena, provided they returned to $\mathrm{Se}-$ wille; under penalty of death, and confifcation of their cargoes, in cafe of non-compliance with that abfurd injunction. As for the cities belonging to the crown of Arragon, they were wholly excluded from the commerce of America, and could reap no advantage from the newly difcovered continent. In confequence of thefe regulations, and the heavy duties of twenty per cent. impofed onall goods exported to America, or imported from it, befide the duty of tonnage on. the veffels; the contraband trade became fo lucrative, and of courfe fo extenfive in its operations, that little could be carried on to advantage under the fanction of the laws. And the manufacturers of Spain, who A. D. 1545 , had fuch a demand for goods, that merchants were happy to engage with them fix years before hand, contracting to take from them all that they could poffibly produce; thefe fame manufacturers lived to fee the market loft, and were reduced from the height of commercial affiuence, to penury and want.

[ 396 ]

A. D. 1720 , the emporium was changed, and the commerce, which for two centurieshad proved a fource of wealth to Seville, was tranflated to Cadiz. At the fame time the duties were lowered, and, inftead of twenty per cent. on exports, rated according. to their value, all bale goods and boxes paid a fettled tonnage of five reals and an half of plate for the cubic palm, without examination, or any confideration, either of the nature or of the quality of the articles contained in them. The tonnage varied according to a table comprehending the fixteen: ports of Spanihh America, being different in $r$ r each. The inexpediency of thefe regula tions is too obvious to efcape unnoticed by: the reader.

Thefe were not, however, the only miftakes made by the Spanifh government in its commerce with the colonies; for, inftead of difpatching fmall veffels frequently, as the market might require; previous to the year 1748, the whole trade was carried on by twenty-feven galleons, and flotas to the number of about twenty-three; the former

failing annually to Porto Bello, the latter; once in three years, to Vera Cruz; the former for the commerce of Peru, the latter for that of Mexico; the frmalleft veffel being about five hundred and fifty tons, the others from eight hundred to one thoufand.

The galleons firft touched at Carthagena for the convenience of the merchants of Popayan and Santa Fé, who brought gold and bezoar ftones, carrying back with them, in exchange, provifions and European goods. But the principal mart was Porto Bello, a town fituated in fuch a barren country, and fubject to fuch noxious vapours, that, except during the annual fair, which lafted forty days, it was deferted. Hither the merchants brought their gold and filver, with Peruvian bark, and Vicuña wool; and beyond this the Spanif trader could not fend his goods, nor could the Pe ruvians difpofe of theirs, upon their own account, in Spain.

The Englih, by an article in the peace of Utrecht, had the privilege of fending an-: nually a hip of five hundred tons to Porto Bello, loaded with all kinds of merchan-

dife; but under covert of this indulgence they commonly freighted one of twice that burthen, accompanied by tenders from Jamaica, with which, when near the port, they exchanged provifions for piece goods; and by that contrivance, ufually carried more articles of commerce than five or fix of the Spanifh fleet. From A. D. ${ }_{7} 737$, the fair, and, together with it, Panama and Porto Bello, have declined. (V. Dampier's and Ulloa's Voyages.) simatiot derontic Javer

As long as the court confined the trade of Peru to galleons, it gradually decreafed, infomuch that inftead of employing fifteen thoufen it tons, it was funk, in the year 1740, to lefs than two thoufand. ( $V$. Campomanes Educacion popular.) But no fooner had the marquis de la Enfenada fubftituted regifter fhips in the place of galleons, to proceed direttly by Cape Horn to the place of their deftination, than the trade revived; and when, in the year 1765 , the barriers were in part removed, and ali Spain, the provinces of Bifcay alone excepted, was permitted to fend its productions to Jucatan and the windward inlands of Margarita and Trinidad; and when, intead of the duties of the tonelada and palmeo, only fix per cent. was laid upon all goods exported; the commerce, which had been like the fummer's brook, foon refembled a great river, and enriched all the countries through which it flowed.

In confequence of the benefits which merchants, manufacturers, planters, and the revenue received by the partial removal of thefe impediments to commerce, government, although reluctantly, at laft (A. D. 1778) agreeable to the remonftrances of Count Campomanes, confented to lay open the trade of America to all its fubjects, thofe alone excepted, who, not being bound by the general laws of the peninfula, could not fafely be admitted to the enjoyment of this privilege. The inhabitants of Bifcay have, however, no reafon to complain, becaufe they pofiefs an ample compenfation for their lofs in the peculiar immunities, which they inherit from their fathers, and more efpecially in the freedom of their ports.

Such have been the general regulations. But Spain, like England, and other nations of Europe, has granted, from time to time, exclufive exclufive privileges to chartered companies, not only to the injury of its citizens at large, and of its manufacturers in particular, but to the oppreffion of thofe provinces, which have been fubjected to a monopoly. If a country could be found uncivilized, yet free, and abounding with capitals unemployed in trade; or if large fums were required for hazardous undertakings, more than could be raifed on the credit of a private company, in fuch a cafe, the grant of a monopoly, with peculiar privileges, might be endured; but that a trade, once open, fhould be confined for the benefit of a few, to the difadvantage of the many, is inconfiftent with every principle of equity, and of commercial policy.

A. D. 1728, Philip V. granted by charter to a company, taking the name of Guipuzcoa, the exclufive trade of Caraccas, in the province of Venezuela, with the privilege of refhipping, by fmaller veffels, all its furplus commodities for Cumana and Guayana, with Trinidad and Margarita, two inlands at the mouth of the Oronoco, that this company might exchange European goods for gold, filver, hides, cacao, fugar,

Vol. II. D d and and fuch other fruits as thefe countries produced; but in the event, cacao became their ftaple commodity. A. D. 1752, the province of Maracaybo was added to their grant.

This company at firft employed twelve veffels to carry on its trade, with nineteen to guard the coaft from fmuggiers, varying thefe numbers as fuited their convenience; and for both thefe purpofes they engaged two thoufand five hundred feamen. Such an expence, with the heavy charge of management by directors, fupercargoes, factors, agents, clerks, &c. &c. required confiderable profits, beyond what the private adventurer would have been happy to receive, had the trade been free; and therefore, as was moft natural, produced exaction operating againft the colonift, a contracted commerce checking the manufacturer at home, and feverities exercifed in vain to reftrain the operations of the illicit trader. (Vide Campomanes Educ. pop.)

The ports they ufed in Spain were S. Sebaftian and Cadiz, into which, in five years, from 1770 to 1774 , they imported one hundred feventy nine thoufand one hundred and fifty-fix fanegas of cacao, each fanega being one hundred and ten Caftillian pounds; and by this large im-. portation funk the price of chocolate in Spain to one-half of what it had been before.

The cacao is the fruit of the Theobroma foliis integerrimis, one of the Polyadelphia, Pentandria, and flourighes in America between the tropics, but more efpecially in the province of Venezuela. The fruit grows on the trunk and on the branches, and never fails at any feafon of the year. In Spain they mix fix pounds of the nut with three pounds or three and an half of fugar, feven pods of vanillas, one pound and an half of Indian corn, and half a pound of cinnamon, fix cloves, one drachm of capficum, fome roucou nut, to improve the colour, and a fmall portion of mulk, or ambergris, to give it a pleafant fcent. Some people, however, ufe only the nut, with fugar and cirnamon. The Indians, to one pound of the nut put half a pound of Indian corn, with an equal quantity of fugar, and fome rofe-water.

The vanillas are pods filled with minute feeds, from a parafitical climbing plant, defcribed under the name of Epidendrum Vanilita, Sp. Pl. 1347, belonging to the Gynandrous clafs, (v. Pulteney's View of the Writings of Linnæus.)
A. D. 1780 , the Carraccas company received the fevereft fhock in the capture of a rich convoy by Lord Rodney, valued at more than two hundred thoufand pounds; and a few years after, their capital was abforbed in a new eftablifment, called the Company of the Philippines.

This company, inftituted agreeably to the ideas fuggefted by the Abbé Raynal, in his view of the European rettlements, took its rife in the year 1785 , with a capital of twelve hundred thoufand pounds, and with valuable privileges granted to it for a term of twenty-five years. Previous to this eftablifiment, two fhips failed annually, one from Acapulco, a fea-port of Mexico, and croffing the Pacific Ocean, carried the treafures of America to the Philippines; the other, returning by the fame courfe from Manilla, the capital of Luconia, came to Acapulco, where it was met by veffiels from Lima, loaded with cacao, quickfilver, and hard dollars; in barter for which the merchants fent back china ware, fpices, perfumes, filk, callicoes, mullins, and printed linens, the produce of the Eaft.

When the Philippine company began its operations, this traffic ceafed; and now, under the fpecious idea of faving time, with freight and infurance, required in conveying the gold and filver, but chiefly filver, of Peru and Mexico, by Europe to the eaft, thefe precious metals are fent directly weftward to the place of their final deftination, whilt the more bulky and perifhable produce of the Eaft, to the fame amount in value, is diverted from its former courfe, and made to defcribe, in the oppofite direction, that fegment of the circle, which had anciently been traced by the filver and the gold.

Indoftan. Thefe, with the filver, indigo, and cochineal of America, the company barters with the merchants of Afia for mulins, cottons, filks, fpices, tea, quickfilver, and china ware, which, with the fuperabundant produce of the illands, are now brought by the Cape of Good Hope to Europe, and are admitted under eafy duties into Spain with a drawback of one-third on their exportation.

Nothing could be more flattering to the hopes of the minifter, than a plan apparently fo well contrived, and carried on under the aufpices of a moft able and enterprifing foreigner, who had already fignalized himfelf by the formation of the bank. Yet pleafing as the profpect was, all his hopes, and all the expectations of the nation are upon the point of vanifning. With heavy charges of adminiftration, with every difadvantage in the purchafe of commodities, the chief articles of trade are either fpoiling for want of a market, or fold to a confiderable lofs. As for tea they never ufe it; china ware is little in requeft, and even with us will fcarcely pay the freight; the filks, the mullins, and the cotton goods, whilit they could find purchafers, had a tendency to deftroy deftroy their favourite manufactures; and now, fince thefe latter articles muft abide the iffue of a fair competition with the Englin, the company may be faid to have received its mortal wound.

In a country fubject to defpotic power, if the mininer of the day will purchafe confidence, he mut bid high for it; if he will have trading companies incorporated, with commanding capitals, he muft grant them monopolies, with exclufive privileges, inconfiftent with the general good. Yet after all, fuch companies will hold thefe privileges by a moft uncertain tenure, and when they come to balance their accounts, may find, that whilf they flattered themfelves with the hope of gaining more than juft and reafonable intereft for their money, they have loft the capital itfelf.

Should this be the event with the Philippine company, the nation will have reafon to rcjoice, and the private merchant may triumph in its fall, not on account of its oftenfibly exclufive privileges, but becaufe the whole of America and of Africa being open to its fpeculations, no limited capitals can fand a competition with it in the market. Had they met with the fupport they had reafon to expect, they muft have fwallowed up the whole trade of Spain and in the iffue have been the ruin of that country.

They have already extended their operations to Vera Cruz, to Buenos Ayres, and to moft fea-ports of America, and at the prefent moment they are purchafing flaves on the coaft of Africa. Thefe formerly were fupplied by the Engliih, agreeably to an article in the peace of Utrecht, known by the name of the Affento. Since the expiration of this grant, various contracts have been made, and among others, one recently with Dawfon and Baker, of Liverpool, who have agreed to furnih three thoufand annually to the Spanifh illands, and upon this contract have received three hundred thoufand pounds for thofe they have fupplied already.

The treatment of the negroes in the Spanif fettlements is fo humane, fo wife, fo juft, and fo perfectly agreeable to the principles of political ceconomy, that I rejoice in the opportunity of giving to their government the praife, which is fo peculiarly liarly its due. The flave, both in his perfon and his property, is under the protection of the laws, and retains the right of redemption upon equitable terms. Thefe are fettled by arbitrators, the flave having the privilege of choofing one, and the mafter having the nomination of the other; and in cafe of their difagreement, the judge fixes upon a third.

As to acquifition of property, it is rendered eafy to the flave, if he has either induftry, or any defire to be free; becaufe he may chim the numerous feftivals, befide two hours in the middle of the day, to cultivate his garden, to feed his poultry and his pigs, and to carry his commodities to market, But fuppofing him to be a good fervant, oppreft by a cruel mafer, and not to have acquired fufficient property for his own redemption, it is not uncommon for another planter, being a witnefs of his fidelity, to lend hirn money for the purchafe of his freedom, and thus the generous mafter gains a valuable fervant, whillt the flave becomes happy in a mater, to whom he can feel himielf attached. From the apprehenfion of this, many planters, diftin-

guifhed for feverity, are faid to be gentle to thofe flaves, who by their amiable difpofition, or by more than common excellence, have merited attention.

Is not this regulation more beneficial to the whole community, than if all the flaves indifcriminately were refored to freedom? In the Spanifh iflands its good effects have been experienced to fuch a degree, that moft of the artificers, the tradefmen, and mechanics, are negroes, who by their induftry and frugality, or by their fingular fidelity, have obtained their freedom; and to the credit of this inflitution it has been obferved, that two of the beft battalions at the Havannah are compofed of blacks, who have been flaves.

It were much to be wifhed that we might be warranted, with equal juftice, to beftow commendations on the Spanifh court for liberality of conduct towards the colonies; but unfortunately, the fame fpirit of monopoly prevails in that, as in the other courts of Europe, the fame narrow policy, the fame contracted views; producing both at home and abroad languifhing manufactures, a crippled trade, with poverty and want of population, and in the colonies, difcontents, tending towards difmemberment of empire.

In confequence of oppreffive regeulations attempted in Peru, that rich proviace was well nigh loft to Spain, if its poiitical feparation may be confidered as a lofs. For the Marquis de Sonora, to whofe memory is due much encomium for his removal of impediments to trade, and for many regulations highly beneficial to the commerce of his country, when he attempted to eftablifh in Peru a royal monopoly of tobacco, with fome taxes odious to the people, he kindled the flames of civil war; (A.D.1781) and had it not been for the indifcretion of the rebellious chief, the event would have been the fame which England experienced upon a fimilar occafion. The leader of this revolt was Tupacamaro, cafique of Arequipa, who, pretending to derive his origin from the facred line and to be defcended from the fun, called himfeif the Ynca. He had met with friendfhip and protection from the corregidor; yet he began his revolt by caufing this man to be hanged; and fuch were the namerous in_ fances ftances of his cruelty and devaftations committed on the perfons and the property of both foes and friends, that many of the Indians joined with government againft him. He was at laft taken prifoner, and hanged; and by his death a period was put to the civil war, yet not till more than two hundred thoufand perfons had perifhed in the conflit.

The minifter of the Indies rendered effential fervice to the mines, by lowering the price of quick filver from eighty hard dollars to forty-one, that is, to eight pounds four fhillings the quintal or hundred weight. The mines of Spain, chiefly that of Almaden, formerly produced a fufficient quantity of this femi-metal for the colonies. They were at that time under the direction of the famous Bowles, an Irihman of fingular abilities, and of fuch integrity, that after having gained millions for the king, his widow has been left to fpend the refidue of her days in poverty. At prefent, Spain can furnifh only fixteen thoufand quintals, and therefore, to fupply the deficiency, a contract has been made with the count de Greppi, the imperial conful at Cadiz, for twelve thoufand quintals annually, for which government agrees to give fiftythree hard dollars, felling it again at fixtythree. There was indeed a good mine of quickfilver at 2uancavelica, in Peru; but by covetoufnefs and bad management, it fell in, and was loft. Even after this, Ulloa might have re-eftablifhed it, had he not been fo indifcreet as to detect and to oppofe. the mal-adminiftration of fome men who were in power.

In confequence of thus reducing the price of quickfilver, and lowering the tribute of gold to one in twenty, and of filver to one in ten, inftead of taking, as formerly, twenty per cent on each, the produce of both increafed, and in Mexico, A. D. ${ }^{1} 776$, double the ufual quantity of filver was coined, amounting to more than two millions and a half of ferling money.

The whole produce of the Spanifh mines in America amounted, in the year 1776 , to thirty millions of dollars, or, in fterling, four millions and a half; but in the fpace of fix years it rofe confiderably, and is now ftated at five millions four hundred thoufand pounds.

[ 4 I 4 ]

On the firt difcovery of America, this treafure centered in Spain; and, as far as laws could operate, was confined to the peninfula. The confequence of this was, the ruin of their manufactures at home; for, as the contes juitly complained to the emperor Charles $V$. the quantity of goid and fiiver in flagnation there, raifed the price of labour. (v. Campomanes Educ. populai, pait iv. page 112, note 93.) Yet, in procefs of time, the fecret was developed, that no human power can ftop the natural progrefs of thefe precious metals; and Spain, exhaufted of its filver, was overwhelmed with bafe copper money, poured into it from furrounding nations. (v. Campomanes, E. P. part iv. p. 272.)

The fact itelif is notorious, that the country is deftitute of fpecie, at leaft relatively fo; and count Campomanes, with great propriety, points out the real caufes which have produced this effect. As fuch, he ftates the expenfive wars carried on in the fupport of foreign dominion; and, in confequence of their having loft their manufactutes, the fums expended to purchafe from from their more induftrious neighbours the moft common articles of clothing.

In the year 1784, the value of exports to America was as follow, being reduced to pounds fterling:

| Spanih produce. | Foreign produce. | Total produce. |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |

| Coruña 64,575 | 39,962 | 104,537 |
| Santander 36,715 | 90,173 | 126,888 |
| Tortofa 7,669 | 289 | 7,958 |

| $f_{0.1}, 958,84$ | 2,389,220 | ,348,07 |

The duties upon there produced one hundred feventy thoufand and eight hundred pounds.

The value of imports from America was as follow, being reduced to ferling.

Cadiz

[ 416 ]

|  | In morey and jewels. | In morchandife. |

|  | f.9,291,237 | $f \cdot 3,343,936$ |

The whole import was $f_{0} 12,635,173$, being more than double what was fated by the abbé Raynal; and the duty upon this amounted to five hundred twenty-feven thoufand four hundred and twenty-three pounds.

The various prices of commodities coming from America were, A. D. ${ }^{1775}$, in Cadiz, viz.

Cockineal, the beft, from ninety-feven to one hundred and four ducats of eleven reals of plate the arroba, or about inxteen fhillings the pound.

Indigo, from twentymone to thirty-four reals of plate the pound, the real of plate being four pence halfpenny.

[ 417 ]

therefore, fixteen fanegas are equal at Ca diz to twenty-five Winchefter buhels, it may be reckoned at $\frac{f}{\sim} \cdot 3 \cdot 16 \mathrm{~s} .9 \mathrm{~d}$. the bufhel.

Sugar, moderately white, twenty-five reals of plate the arroba, or about four pence halfpenny a pound.

Hides, from Busnos Ayres, Caraccas, and Orinoco, about five pence a pound, or eighteen fhillings the hide when raw; but from the Havannah confiderably lefs.

Vicuña Wool, from Peru, about two pence halfpenny a pound; and from Buenos Ayres, at two pence nearly: but the beft fheeps wool, when wafhed, may be purchafed there for lefs than two and three pence the arroba of twenty-eight pounds.

Cotton, clean, about three fhillings a pound; but as the ifland of Cuba is found to produce it in vaft abundance, the price muft fall confiderably.

Copper, from Mexico and Peru, twentyfour dollars the quintal, or about eight pence a pound, on a fuppofition that one hundred and four pounds Spanifh equal one hundred and twelve Englifh. From Chili it is twenty-five per cent. cheaper.

Tin, from America, was twenty dollars the quintal, while that from England fold for twenty-five; the former being romething more than fix pence halfpenny per pound. (v. Campomanes, Apend. a la Ed. pop. p. 144.)

Tallow might be brought from Bueno Ayres, where it fells for two and fix pence the barrel of twelve arrobas, or ten pence the hundred weight: but heavy duties check this branch of commerce. (Camp. E. P. p. 333.)

A gentleman from Peru gave me famples of wool which came from two animals each resembling the Vicuna, one called Alpaca, the other Llacma; the latter coarse, but the former very fine and excellent for hats. It is to be lamented that there have not yet found their way into the market.

Merchants are liable to peculiar difadvantages in Spain, not only from the nature of the government, which is perfectly defpotic, and from the ignorance, mifinforma-. tion, or inattention, too often to be lamented in the beft of minifters; not only by abfurd prohibitions, by monopolies, and by oppreffive duties, but by the mifconduct of the provincial governors, who frequently are influenced by mercenary views, in the judgment they pronounce between contending parties.

A late military governor, much favoured by the king, being fupreme in all civil and fifcal caufes, when he was new in office, refufed taking bribes, and ruled his rapacious officers with a rod of iron; but long before he was difgraced, he became infected with the love of money, and received it upon the moft infamous occafions without a blufh. Under his protection, merchants defrauded the revenue, and bankrupts found fhelter E e 2 from from their creditors. This was notorious yet, when he was recalled, fuch had been his predeceffors, and fuch were they likely to be, who fhould be appointed to fucceed him, that he retired lamented, and carried with him certificates of his good conduct, figned however, chiefly by the monks, whom, previous to his departure, he had much carefled.

On his retteat, his power was divided, and the civil government was adminitered by the alcaldes mayores of the city, each alternately holding it a week. One of there having, for the trifing confideration of twenty dollars, granted an order to a cre-ditor in Spain to feize, for his own private benefit, the effects of a bankrupt; the agent of other creditors in England, taking the alcalde by the hand, with forty dollars, readily procured a reverfal of the order, and thus parchafed fubftantial juftice for his employers.

Another alcalde having promifed, for one hundred dollars, not to grant an attachment to a perfon, who had pretenfions to fome property, yet granted it, and being reproached for his conduct, replied with coolnefs, coolnefs, "How could I avoid it, when " he gave me forty doilars? but be not un" eafy, for to-morrow I will take of the " attachment."

Obnoxious to fuch abufes, how can commerce flourif ?

The province of Andalufia, watered throughout its whole extent by the Guadalquivir, if properly cultivated, hould produce corn fufficient, not only for its own confumption, but for exportation. Yet the wheat annually imported is little lefs than one million and an half of fanegas; the fanega being commonly one hundred weight, but at Cadiz, about three pounds lefs. Nearly one half this quantity, in the year ${ }^{1} 7^{8} 7$, came from Africa; eighty-five thoufand fanegas were imported from America, and the remainder was furnifhed by Naples, Sicily, and Sardinia; the whole amount that year being one million four hundred and forty-eight thoufand fanegas.

It is remarkable, that though they have an opportunity of conftructing tide-mills, yet, for want of thefe, they grind their corn with mules, which cofts them ten reals, or two fhillings nearly, per quintal or fa, nega.

To prevent a fcarcity of corn, and to make a profit by the fale of it, the city has eftablifhed a public granary, from which the bakers are fupplied at a given price; and, according to that, the magittrates regulate the affize of bread. I vifited this vaft repofitory, and was much furprifed to fee the heaps of wheat full of all kinds of trumpery, not only barley, but vetches of various kinds, and a variety of noxious feeds. Had the grain been winnowed by the machine now in common ufe all over Scotland, it would have been more beautiful to the eye, and much more wholefome for their food.

When I had fatisfied my curiofity in viewing and contemplating the articles of commerce, under the protection of a friend, with whom I had fpent much time at Ma drid, I made a little excurfion to fee the arfenals at the Caraca. Cadiz itfelf is itrongly fortified towards the fea by rocks, and, on the land fide, by works erected at a vaft expence. Beyond thefe are market gardens on the ftrand, watered by norias; and here begins the narrow caufeway leading to the ifle of Leon, which is an extenfive flat, uncultivatea, and fcarceiy fufceptible of cultivation. Although barren, it produces confiderable profit by the numerous falt-pools, which require very little trouble or expence; becaufe the fun and air quickly occafion the water to evaporate, leaving the falt cryitallized.

The village of Port Royal, through which we paffed, is one long ftreet, well paved, and very pretty. Here my curiofity prompted me to vifit M. de Langara, who gave me a polite reception. Pleafed with his countenance and manner, I moft fincerely pitied his misfortunes.

Ever fince the war, the exertions of Spain. have been inceffant to render her marine refpectable; but more efpecially at the time when I was there, all was in motion, and the minifter of the marine was making the moft ftrenuous efforts to equip a formidable fleet. This was done to vin-: dicate their claims upon the Mofquito fhore, although that territory was never fabject to the crown of Spain, and the independent princes, who have dominion there, Ee4 \% had

When I returned to England, I examined the nature and extent of the fettlement which caufed fo much uneafinefs to Spain. It confifted of no more than five hundred and fixty-nine freemen, including the womerr and their children, with one thoufand feven hundred and fixty-three black flaves, and two hundred and four head of cattle. The uneafinefs arofe, therefore, not from the number of the fettlers, but from their contraband trade; from their communication with the Mofquitos, who, in time of war, had been ufed to moleft the Spaniards; and from the apprehenfion that, by their means, the Englifh, in fome future war, might eftablifh themfelves in force on the lake of Nicaragua.

This fettlement was certainly valuable to England as the connecting medium between Jamaica and the Spanifh Main for the exchange of our manufactures with Guatimala againft indigo, cochineal, filver, and hard dollars. Indeed the indigo, growing wild on all that coaft, yields the beft commodity, and no country produces finer fugar-canes. The infant colony made about a hundred and fifty hogheads in one year; but being obliged to pay the foreign duty in England, the mills were fuffered to decay. Mahogany was a principal article of their commerce; and of this the annual export was about three million feet. Befide thefe articles, they fent to England four tons of turtle-fhells, paying a duty of one fhilling a pound, with a hundred and twenty thoufand pounds weight of farfaparilla, the duty of which, at feven pence a pound, was three thoufand five hundred pounds; a fum more than fufficient to difcharge all the expences of this new fettlement.

Such was the value of our poffeffions on the Mofquito Shere, that neither the minifter who figned the preliminaries of peace at the clofe of a difaftrous war, nor his immediate fucceffor in office, who ratified that peace, would agree to their relinquilhment; yet, in the year 1787 , the fettiement was evacuated, and our moft faithful allies were abandoned to the mercy of their inveterate enemies.

The

The magazines at the Caraca; all well arranged, are full of ftores, and new docks have been confructed at a vaft expence, for, being funk in a bed of foft clay and loam, they are confequently difficult to conftruet, and require unremitted labour to keep them dry. For this purpofe they ufe chain pumps, to the number of fixteen, each worked by eight men, who alternately pump four hours, and reft eight. Thefe, are criminals, monty fmugglers, condemned to this painful fervice, fome for three, others for feven, and not a few for fourteen years. The fmugglers are, however, diftinguined from the thieves by a fingle chain, whilf the latter carry two. In this dock-yard alone are athoufand of thofe miferable creatures. I obferved here a practice worthy of imitation. To preferve their ftore mafts from the worms, from the wind, and from the fun, they are buried in fand, and by this fimple method are preferved for many years.

In order to flew how much their naval power has advanced in the fpace of a few years, I hall fubjoin a fatement of their

I take no notice of the fmaller frigates, they being of trifling importance.

By this fatement it is evident, that in twelve years the naval force of Spain has been nearly doubled, confidering merely the guns; but when we take into confideration the number of their leading thips; in point of refpectability, it will appear to be much more than doubled; and if we pay attention either to the views of government, or to the peculiar tafte and difpofition of the new fovereign, we may conclude that no expence pence will be fpared, nor the moft watchful attention wanting, to render their navy fill more formidable. In the fummer of 1790 their fleet of obfervation confifted of twenty-eight lhips of the line, among which were four fhips of 112: befide thefe, they had fix of the line fationed in the Mediterranean, and a flrong fleet in America.

It is a queftion worthy of difcuffion, whether Spain ought to aim at being diftinguifhed as a naval power; or whether the fums annually expended with that view would not be more profitably employed in exciting induftry, by opening communications, promoting agriculture, cherifhing manufactures, encouraging trade, and by adopting every plan, followed by the moft enlightened nations, to facilitate commercial intercourfe. Should the adhere to the colonifing fyftem, a powerful navy will be needful to protect her commerce, and to fecure her monopolies; but then it fhould be inquired, will the proportion of trade obtained, beyond what the would enjoy, if the had lof her authority over thefe diftant provinces, or if their trade was free, pay the expence of arming thus in times of peace, and of employing fuch a multitude of revenue officers to guard extenfive coafts? but more efpecially, will it indemnify her for all the commercial wars, in which the may be engaged to fupport her trade?

Thefe are queftions proper to be refolved; and her beft politicians think, that the would be richer and more powerful without colonies. If their opinion is well founded, it is abfurd to expend to much upon their navy.

No country can boaft greater advantages for trade than Spain; and even without a fingle fhip fhe might be powerful and rich. Her wine, brandy, raifins, figs, almonds, oranges, and nuts; her olives, oil, foapafhes and foap; her filks, linens and cottons, were they properly encouraged, with the fineft wool, not omitting the efparto, fo valuable for cables, &ic. her iron, fuperior in quality to that of other countries, with tin, lead, and copper in abundance; to which might be added her furplus corn, were the land in proper tillage: all thefe productions of the foil, with the

the manufactures, which, under a good government, muft naturally find eftablihment in Spain, would be fuch a never-failing. fource of wealth, that fhould any of the furrounding nations wifh to difturb her peace, fhe could have no caufe to fear, becaufe upon a well-peopled, compact, and united empire, no lanting impreffion can be made. But fuppoing Spain, with fuch advantages of foil and climate, producing fuch a rich variety of articles for trade, without exhaufting colonies, armed for felf-defence, but not infpiring either jealoufy or fear, fhould confine her views wholly to domeftic induftry; which of all her neighbours could feel any inclination to moleft her? In fuch circumftances mut not every one of them rejoice in her profperity?

War, among the rude inhabitants of infant countries, has only plunder for its object. This kind of depredation a well-difciplined people have no need to dread; and among the civilized it has been long fince forgotten. But the flames of war have been too often kindled among poiilied nations, with a view to conqueft and projects of ambition have feldom falled to fipring from wealth and power. Yet the more enlightened begin to fee the folly of fuch purfuits; and all, who are fkilled in political arithmetic, are able to demontrate their inexpediency. Not to mention the expence of conquefts, both in men and money, it is found by experience, that an empire, not merely when poffeffing diftant provinces, but as it extends its limits beycud certain bounds, becomes proportionably weak. Whenever this truth fhall be univerfally acknowledged, only one fource of devaftation will remain.

At prefent, the greateft danger to the profperity of Europe is from commercial wars. But when the colonies, fill fubjugated to the European powers, fhall caft off the yoke, and the commercial nations, better acquainted with their true intereft, fhall duly cultivate the arts of peace, this fource of contention will be dried up, and the only. furviving conteft will be that of induftry; or, in the language of the eaft, men will beat their fwords into ploughhares, and their fpears into praninghooks.

[ 432 ]  The benefits arifing to mankind from this fpecies of contention, are defcribed by Hefiod, with fuch beautiful fimplicity, that I hall take the liberty to quote him.

Marks the vicifitudes of human life.
On widely different principles they move;
Who hates the one, the other moft approve.
Parent the one, of fierce protracted jars,
To mas, predeftined fource of endiefs wars.
Night, fable goddefs, gave the better birth,
By Saturn wooed in lonely caves of earth.
This fpurs the lazy on to noble deeds, While the bright flame juft emulation feeds.
The idle neighhour of the growing great Envies that fource of wealth, which forms his flate.
Who plants, who fows, with him in both to vie,
Shall find fome mimic mortal ever nigh.
Pregnant with good this mild contention lives;
By her each meager artift eats and thrives:
Beggar on brother beggass keeps his eye,
And learns from them his humble fuit to plyo

Hesiod's Works and Days?
As we returned from the caraca, on the caufeway, a little above the level of the fea, and afterwards in the higheft part of the city, I obferved a porous kind of rock, compofed of flinty gravel, and broken fhells, united by a cement, fuch as was fufficient to connect, but not to fill up the interfices between them. This fact fhould be treafured in the memory, becaufe it accords with many others, and points out a remarkable event in the hiftory of the earth, fubfequent to the grand revolution occafioned by the deluge.

As we returned to the city, I had the fatisfaction of feeing a company of young gentlemen, who amufed themfelves in the fofs of the ramparts, with their favourite diverfion of the balloon. Their ball, about eight inches in diameter, is made of leather, ftrongly inflated by means of a machine, fo as to be exceedingly elaftic, Vol. II. Ff after after which it is fmeared with clay. This they fmite very obliquely againft a wall, with their right hand; and to give it a greater momentum, as well as to protect the fift, the hand is inclofed in a wooden cafe, in which are many wide and deep furrows, croffing at right angles, fo as to leave a correfponding number of blunt points. The antagonifts, at the diftance of about fourfcore yards, receive the balloon as it rebounds, and before it falls, one of them drives it back again, varying the angle within a given fpace, fo as beft to elude the attention of his opponents. This: game, a fpecies of fives, yet more elegant than ours, requires much ftrength and good addrefs.

In the evening I went to fee the theatre It is large, elegant, and commodious; but as plays would not accord with the folemnity of Lent, they compromifed the matter, and contented themfelves with an exhibition of ropedancers, tumblers, pantomimes, and puppet fhows, with fome moft whimfical dances, in all which they had excellent performers. The dancers were in the ftile ftile of lunatics, every one clothed in fome antic drefs, and the fcene reprefented the court-yard of a madhoufe. They began with country dances, then fuddenly they changed to the cotillion, the allemand, the galliego, and the fandango, paffing with quick tranfitions from one to the other, and concluding with a rich variety of figures.

As it was Lent I heard many fermons, but not one, which to me appeared interefting. The moft polihhed orators confine themfelves to churches; but as it is found ufeful to have fome, who can adapt themfelves to the underftandings and feelings of the vulgar, many preachers are appointed to harangue the multitude affembled in the market place, and this they do with a vehemence of voice and genture fuited to their congregations. I obferved often three or four of theie engaged at the fame time, yet keeping fuch a proper diftance as not to interfere.

One Wednefday evening, I went to the Francifcans to hear a penitential fermon delivered by a father of that fociety, who was famous for his difcourfes. This being

[ $43^{6}$ ]

finifhed, all the lights were extinguifhed, and inftantly the fourges were applied. We could readily diftinguin a difference in the found, according as the part fubjected to difcipline was more or lefs covered with elaftic mufcles, and in proportion to the degree of energy with which it. was applied; but moderation was the prevailing fentiment, and many fcarcely let the left hand know what the right hand did. How much more fervent is the zeal of Catalans, who feem as if the fcourge drew blood at every ftroke! Here not a voice was to be heard; whereas at Barcelona the people uttered not only groans and howlings, but a mixture between both more horrible than either.

At times when the market place was not occupied by orators, the fcribes took poffeffion of it with their benches, at which they fat with pen, ink, and paper, to write and read letters of all forts, and to execute every kind of deed. The common price of a letter is eight quartos, or two pence farthing; and although this fum is trifing in itfelf, yet, confidering the

[ 437 j

Before I left Cadiz, I had the fatisfaction of being witnefs to the ceremonies attending a funeral. After the phyficians have turned their back upon a patient, nothing remains for him but confeffion, abfolution, the eucharift, extreme unction, death; and no fooner is the laft event announced, than all the friends of the deceafed affemble, dar la pefame, that is, to condole with the afflicted widow, who, clothed in mourning, and ftretched upon a bed, yet fcarcely vifible for want of light; receives their compliments, and in a low voice feaks to each of them. As it is fuppofed that no one in the family of the deceafed can pay attention to the wants of nature, fome friend takes care to fend in a dinner ready dreffed, with plenty of every thing the feafon can produce. When the vifitors retire, the widow, fon, father, brothers, uncles, counns, and relations, each by name, unite in a meffage of invitation to all the friends of the deceafed, requefting their Ef3 attendanco attendance when the body thall be carried, the day following, to the grave, and at the fervice to be performed the day after the interment for the repofe of the departed foul.

In obedience to this fummons, they affemble at the houre of the deceafed, and walk in proceffion to the church, where the corpfe is placed during the fervice before the altar, with the face uncovered, and the hands uplifted, as reprefented on our ancient monuments, with this difference, that the deceafed has a crucifix between his hands. After the funeral fervice, the neareft relatives affemble in the veftry, when all their acquaintance pay their refpects, each by bowing to them, as he paffes filently before them. This finifhed, they return in folemn proceffion to the houfe, where the falutation, with the fame filence, is repeated.

If, as in the cafe of the gentleman whofe obrequies I attended, the deceafed was a perfon of condition, on the day fucceeding the interment, the church is hung with mourning, all light is excluded, excepting that of numerous wax tapers, a funeral pile is erected, and all the relatives affemble round it to attend the fervice of the mals for the foul of the deceafed. On the lors of a hufband, the difconfolate widow is under obligation to abtain fix months from all public amufements; but the widower is acquited for a few days abfinence from thefe.

Few places are more healthy than Cadiz. .Yet when the folano, or fouth wind, blows, which comes to them over the forching plains of Africa having only the intervention of a ftrait, all the paffions are inflamed, and during its prevalence, the inhabitants, who are moft irritable, commit every fpecies of excefs.

For the pleafures of focial intercourfe, I did not meet with any city more agreeable than this. As all nations are here affembled within narrow limits, by their mutual intercourfe they foften each others manners; and as, notwithftanding the late fhoç, commerce flourifhes in a degree, with its never failing attendants, wealth and horpitality; a ftranger 'may pais away his time with with the highen fatisfation to himfelt. For my part, excepting the vice-conful Mr. Duff, and the imperial confol Count de Greppis I chiefly afociated with Spaniards. Among thefe the principal was Don Antonio Ulloa, the well known companion of D. George Juan, to whom I had been particularly recommended. I found him perfectly the philofopher, fenfible and well informed, lively in his converfation, free and eafy in his mannerş. Having obferved at his door two foldiers mounting guard, I expected fome pride of appearance, but I met with nothing like it. This great man, diminutive in fature, remarkably thin and bowed down with age, clad like a peafant, and furrounded by his numerous family of children, with the youngeft about two years old, playing on his knee, was fitting to receive morning wifitors, in a room, the dimenfions and furniture of which, for a few moments; diverted my attention from himelf, the chief object of veneration. The room was twenty feet long by fourteen wide, and lefs than eight feet high, In this I 12 faw diferred confufedly, chairs, tables, trunks, boxes, books, and papers, a bed, a prefs, umbrellas, clothes, carpenters tools, mathematical inftruments, a barometer, a clock, guns, pictures, looking-glaffes, foffils, minerals, and fhells, his kettle, bafons, broken jugs, American antiquities, money, and a curious mummy from the Canary iflands, or at leaft its trunk with the head and arms, for having been the common play-thing of his children, they had amufed themfelves with drawing its teeth, and breaking off its limbs.

Among the extraneous foffils, he fhewed me a variety of fea-Ihells, collected by himfelf near the fummits of the higheft mountains in America, fome on the furface, but many bedded in the limeftone rock. When I went to take my leave of him, on quitting Cadiz, he prefented me with his Natural Hiftory of South America, a work highly deferving to be tranflated.

making his contract for twelve months. Thefe the magiftrates fell to the butchers, taking a profit for the city, and fixing the retail prices to the confumer. To avoid unufual fractions of a penny, I fhall give thefe in Spanif quartos, of which eight are equal to two pence farthing.

Beef fells for fifteen quartos the pound of fixteen ounces; veal for fixteen; mutton twenty-one ; hog's lard twenty-four; bread feven. Wheat is forty-feven reals the fanega, or five and ten pence nearly for a Winchefter bufhel.

The pay of a labourer is fix reals, or fomething more than fourteen , pence a day; but artifans require double. Merchants reckon one hundred and eight varas. to be equal to one hundred yards; but in reality four hundred and five varas make three hundred and feventy-one yards. The feet and inches bear the fame proportion.

Five fanegas of corn are reckoned in trade to correfpond with eight Winchefter bufhels, but the proportion is fixteen to. twenty five.
